NEW ALLIANCE FORMED IN DENVER

Anti-Corporationists of All Political Complexions Join to Fight Machine.

TO SUPPORT JOINT TICKET

Only Local Issues Involved. Republican Insurgents Will Back State Ticket.

DENVER, Sept. 24.—A triple alliance of platform Democrats, insurgent Republicans and Citizens party members was formed in this city today and support will be given by these three organizations to a county ticket to be named next Wednesday. A conference committee of 15 has apportioned the 30 offices to be filled among the three elements and each met in convention this afternoon and nominated candidates for the offices assigned them.

These nominations must be passed upon by the conference committee which has the power to eliminate undesirables. When this has been done a report will be made to each organization and at the convention next Wednesday each will proceed to select candidates from the list returned by the conference committee.

The three big patronage offices of treasurer, assessor and county clerk were given one to each of the three parties to the alliance in order not to have it said that anyone had been given an advantage over the others.

The platform, which covers county matters, was drawn up by the conference committee and accepted by all three conventions this afternoon. On this committee were former Governor Charles S. Thomas, who led the fight for the seating of the platform Democratic delegation in the state convention, and E. P. Costigan, who acted in similar capacity for the insurgent Republicans at the Colorado Springs convention, both of which delegates were denied even a hearing on the floor of the conventions.

Purely Platform Fight.

Platform Democrats have no grievance against the state ticket but will fight the so-called Denver city hall machine and the county ticket of the regular Democratic wing. Governor Thomas, in addressing the convention today, declared that a city hall in Denver did not intend to support the Democratic state ticket and to offset the effect this might have, the platform Democrats would exert themselves to the utmost to win votes for the state ticket. The initiative and referendum, he said, would be given particular attention in an effort to have it win.

The insurgent Republicans insist that they are really the regular Republicans although they admit that they did not take any part in the caucus and primaries, a fault that led the state committee to decline to grant them more than a formal hearing. Their claim was that the so-called "regulars" were allied with the Denver Democratic machine and were not proceeding as Republicans should.

The insurgents will support the state ticket, but will have nothing to do with the regulars in naming a county ticket and will, they declare, do all in their power to defeat it.

The Citizens party is purely local, having been organized for the last city election. Many of their aldermanic candidates and other nominees, including those for election commissioners, were successful at that election.

MRS. CHAMP CLARK A VISITOR IN CITY

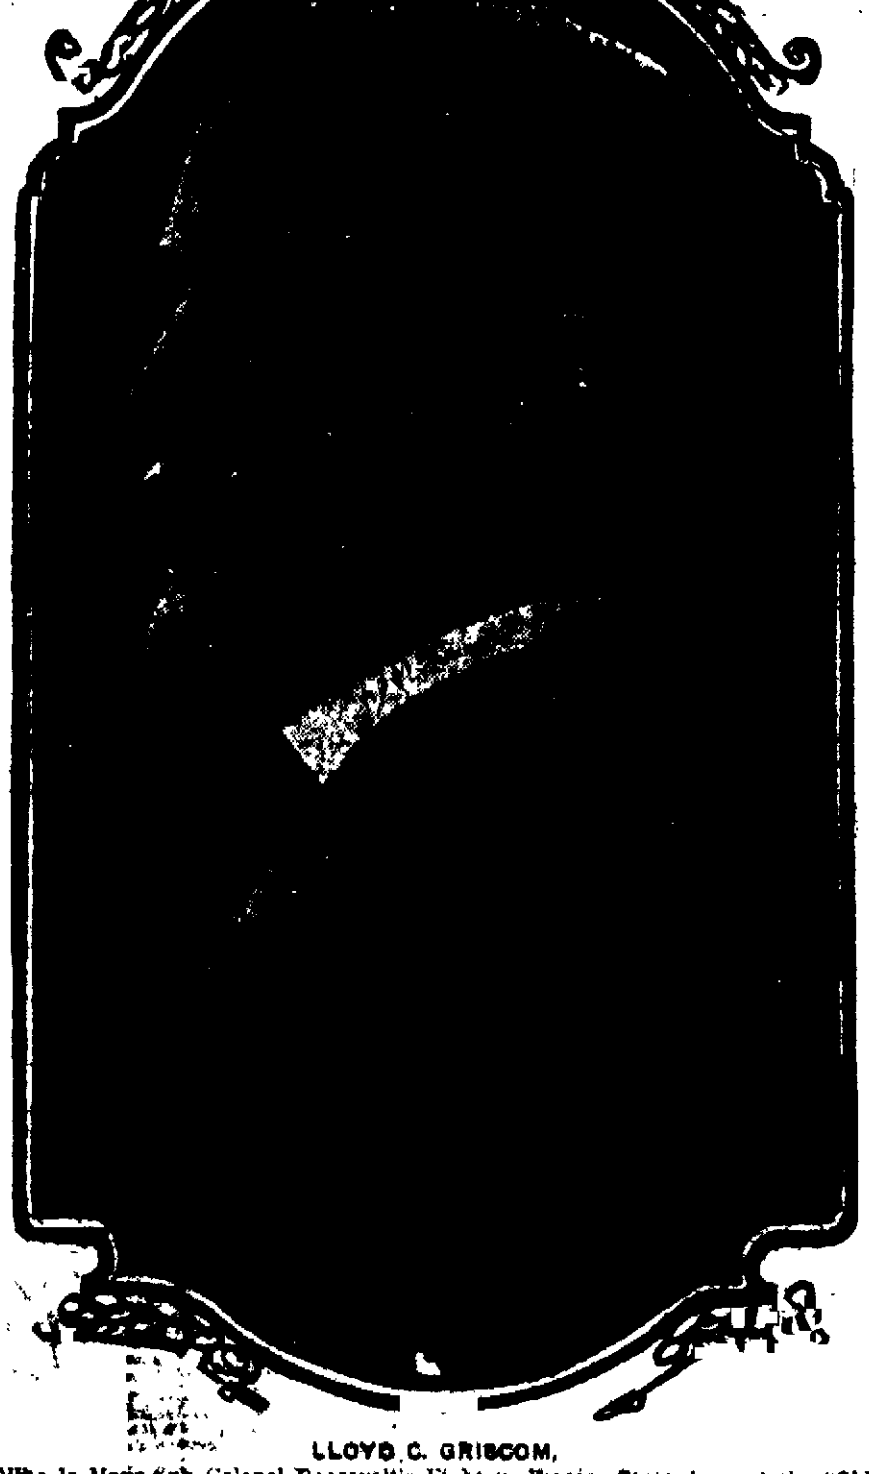

Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the Democratic congressman from Missouri, who is leader of the minority in the House, has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. A. H. Pitser, 1831 North Tejon street, this city, and left yesterday for her home in Bowling Green, Mo. Champ Clark it is said, is slated for speaker of the House to succeed Cannon at the next session, if the Democrats win out.

Mrs. Clark came to this city following her return from a tour of Great Britain and the continent, having gone to Edinburgh as a delegate to the World's Missionary conference. She talked most interestingly of her trip yesterday and is most enthusiastic over Scotland, the home of her ancestors. She was greatly disappointed in the passion play at Oberammergau.

Though the recipient of many honors while abroad, Mrs. Clark expressed herself as being gratified by nothing more than her meeting with Thomas Hardy, the great English novelist, at whose home she was entertained. Herself a woman of rare literary ability, Mrs. Clark is an ardent admirer of Mr. Hardy.

"It will interest Colorado women," she said, "to know that Mr. Hardy is a believer in votes for women, both he and Mrs. Hardy being active suffragists."

Roosevelt Will Wage Battle on Floor of the Convention

LLOYD C. GRISCOM,
Who Is Managing Colonel Roosevelt's Fight in Empire State Against the "Old Guard."

SARATOGA, N. Y., Sept. 24.—If the progressives, under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt, win their fight against the old guard for control of the Republican state convention, which opens on Tuesday, it will be after a battle on the convention floor. It is unlikely that an attempt will be made to poll the state committee on the Roosevelt-Sherman chairmanship controversy at its regular meeting on Monday night.

This is the situation as outlined by President Lloyd C. Griscom of the New York county Republican committee here tonight. It indicates that the progressives doubt their ability to control the state committee and that they prefer to take no chance on having the committee reject Mr. Roosevelt a second time, thinking it safer to leave the solution of the problem to the convention itself, of which they claim control by a large majority.

The minimum Roosevelt vote is placed by Mr. Griscom at 570, while Cornelius V. Collins of this city, who is lining up the Roosevelt forces, places the figures at 583.

Close Contest Promised.

Chairman Woodruff tonight declared there was little change in the situation and that the contest would be close.

Mr. Griscom retold tonight the circumstances leading up to the presentation of Colonel Roosevelt's name at the state committee meeting on August 16. He had been shown an editorial in Mr. Barnes' Albany paper in which appeared this statement:

"The argument advanced by Mr. Griscom that the members of the state committee who voted for Mr. Sherman were deceived is simply a plain lie."

The New York chairman reiterated his former statement that deception had been practised in regard to President Taft's position on the temporary chairmanship by the old guard leaders, but further than this he made no comment.

Colonel Confident

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Sept. 24. Satisfied that his race against the old guard is won, Theodore Roosevelt rested on his oars today. Except for a brief talk in the morning with Wm. H. Willcox, chairman of the public service commission of the First district, and a chat across the dinner table with State Senator J. Mayhew Wainwright of Westchester county, he paid little attention to politics.

Senator Wainwright came to talk about the platform, and particularly

SEN. C. J. HUGHES SUFFERS BREAKDOWN OF SERIOUS NATURE

DENVER, Sept. 24.—Charles J. Hughes, Jr., United States senator from Colorado, is suffering from a breakdown due to overwork. Physicians have advised that it will be necessary for him to spend an indefinite period in California. He left for there last night accompanied by his sons, Gerald and Lafayette Hughes, and Mrs. Gerald Hughes. The party will go to southern California. It is possible that a trip to Honolulu may be made by the party.

While Senator Hughes' condition is serious it has not reached an alarming stage. Medical experts who examined him declared that he had no organic defects, but that his nervous state and general weakness were of a serious nature. Mr. Hughes has been in ill health since the first of the year. His condition was made worse by overwork during the last session of Congress. The intense heat and the effects of the damp climate at Washington, D. C., to which he was unaccustomed, increased his illness.

BURGER FOR CONGRESS

BOULDER, Sept. 24.—James C. Burger of Denver was nominated for Congress by the First district Republican congressional convention here today. His opponents were J. W. McCreary of Greeley and J. C. Miller of Boulder. Burger was selected on the first ballot. The platform adopted by the state convention at Colorado Springs was made the platform of this convention.

RATES ON CRIPPLE CREEK ORES CUT BY U. S. R. & R. CO.

Special to The Gazette

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 24.—Officials of the United States Reduction and Refining Company tonight announced a sweeping reduction in ore treatment rates on all ores from the Cripple Creek district, ranging from 25 cents to $1.50 per ton.

The new rate will be effective with bills of lading of tomorrow's date. The announcement of a reduction is of great interest to lessees, and should stimulate activities and increase the output from the district.

The following rates are announced: Ore up to ¼-ounce value, $4.00 per ton; ¼ to ½ oz., $4.50; ½ to 1 oz., $5.00; 1 to 1¼ oz., $5.50; 1¼ to 1½ oz., $6.00; 1½ to 2 oz., $6.50; 2 to 3 oz., $7.00; 3 to 5 oz., $8.00; 5 to 7½ oz., $9.00; 7½ to 10 oz., $10.

YOUNG REPUBLICANS TO MEET NEXT WEDNESDAY

All young Republicans of El Paso county are requested to meet at the court house at 8 o'clock next Wednesday night to consider the advisability of forming a Republican club. Prominent leaders of the party will probably address the gathering, and will take part in the councils of the club, if formed. It is planned to start an active campaign on behalf of both the county and state Republican tickets.

DREAD MALADY INVADES STATE

INFANTILE PARALYSIS AT FOWLER.

First Cases of Baffling Disease Known in This Section of the Country.

FOWLER, Colo., Sept. 24.—Infantile paralysis has made its appearance in Fowler, and there are now three patients in this city, all girls under three years of age, suffering from this grave malady. They are Anna, daughter of William Diamond; Katherine, daughter of W. L. Shoe, and the 10-months-old infant of M. W. Reavis.

How the disease made its appearance here is not known, as the first babe to develop the trouble had not been outside of the state, and so far as is known no cases have previously occurred in this section of the country.

The malady seemingly has a preference for healthy, robust children between the ages of one and five. After the fifth year of life it is rare. The symptoms at the outset of the disease are not at first alarming and the mother usually considers it a simple illness until the paralysis is discovered. Infantile spinal paralysis is an inflammation of the gray matter in the anterior or front portion of the spinal cord.

The cause of the inflammation is not known, but it is generally believed to be a germ disease. The nerve cells in the portion of the spinal cord attacked are destroyed and permanent paralysis of the muscles, whose nerves center therein, is the result. Later, great deformity results through shrinking of the muscles and bones of the affected limb. There are no symptoms that particularize the disease until the nerve affection is apparent or paralysis sets in.

One of the afflicted children in this city is paralyzed in both lower limbs and can not stand. The other two are affected in a less degree in arms and limbs.

TACOMA, Wash., Sept. 24.—Under the direction of the state board of health requiring quarantine for infantile paralysis, several places were quarantined with a blue card by the health officers today. Two deaths have resulted from the disease here.

DISREGARD OF ORDERS FATAL

SIX KILLED IN WRECK ON INTERURBAN.

Second Disaster of Kind in Indiana Within Three Days. Bridegroom Killed.

TIPTON, Ind., Sept. 24.—Disobedience to orders by the crew of a freight car is said to have been the cause today of the second interurban traction wreck within three days in Indiana. Today's disaster cost the lives of six persons, the serious injury of six more and severe hurts to a score.

The dead:

DR. W. C. HOLTHAUSER, Brooklyn, N. Y.

WALTER H. HOLTHAUSER, Brooklyn, N. Y.

VERDAL RAILSBACK, Hymenia, Ind.

JOSEPH BAKER, motorman on limited car Logansport, Ind.

LEWIS BROO, Kokomo, Ind.

B. F. WELSH, Marshall, Miss.

A southbound freight car crashed headon into a northbound passenger car on the Indianapolis and Peru division of the Indiana Union Traction company, shortly after noon, two miles north of this city. The freight car was in charge of Motorman Lacy and Conductor Sebree.

The freight car is said to have had orders to stop at the first switch north of Ressler's crossing, but tried to make the first switch south. A clump of trees hid the limited and the crew of the freight barely had time to jump to save their lives. The front end of the limited was shattered and all passengers in the smoking compartment were killed.

One of the sad features of the wreck is that of Dr. W. C. Holthauser of Brooklyn, N. Y., who with his brother, Walter K. Holthauser, was killed, was on his way to Kokomo, Ind., to be married tonight to Miss Nellie Cozen, daughter of H. Cozen of that city. The brother was to have been best man.

"I guess we over ran our orders," said Motorman Lacy of the freight car, who, with Conductor Sebree, jumped when he saw the limited bearing down upon them. They could give no explanation for passing the switch.

Just three days ago, almost to the hour, occurred the fatal wreck at Kingsland, Ind., on the Wabash Valley Traction company, which caused the death of 41 persons. The collision occurred under much the same circumstances. At Kingsland a special car loaded to the platform with pleasure-seekers on their way to the Fort Wayne fair, was struck headon by a special car which is declared to have run past the switch on which it was ordered to stop for the ...

Traction officials are now investigating today's wreck, but no statement has been given out.

DO-NOTHING EXTRA SESSION TO CONTINUE UNTIL ELECTION DAY

Special to The Gazette

DENVER, Sept. 24.—Neither branch of the general assembly was in session today, but there is no claim made that public business suffered in consequence. The only difference between being in session and not being in session is that when the assembly members are theoretically in their seats, some of them may be found in the capitol. Not all of them—merely a majority.

Prospects for the passing of any more bills whatever grow daily less and less. The assembly was called together, as has been frequently stated, by Governor Shafroth to secure his own renomination, and to provide campaign material for him after that nomination should be secured. By the aid of Republican senators he got one bill through, and on the strength of that was given the first place on his party's ticket. Now that it comes time to give him something on which to make his campaign, his legislature balks. This is because a majority of the Democratic senators are opposed to his candidacy and opposed to his election. The Governor, during his term of office, has done nothing for these senators or their friends or their bosses, and therefore they consider that he has no direct claim upon them for fealty or support.

Situation a Deadlock.

Governor Shafroth seems determined to try to push through the assembly the measures he has been advocating during his whole term, and this majority of the Democratic senatorial caucus is determined that he shall not. And that is the situation. The appropriation bill to provide for the payment of salaries and expenses of the assembly contains provision for paying them through October, which indicates that the assembly will be held in session, under the present organization and determination to do nothing until right up to election time.

A few days ago a zealous friend of the Governor disclosed a plan, as stated in these dispatches, to have the assembly adjourn, thus ending the caucus agreement of the Democrats in the senate. Then, under this proposed plan, the Governor would call the assembly together again in another special, have his friends unite with Republican senators and secure the passing of some of his pet measures, which have been indorsed by the Republican state platform. Though the Governor promptly denied that he had any such object in view, the opposing senators intend he shall be given no opportunity for any such action. The present organization and agreement is to be maintained right up to the time when it will be too late to play any "cute" political game.

Every day the assembly remains in session without doing anything more than be prayed over and adjourn, the Governor's cause suffers. Republican committeemen in Denver are being surprised every day by assurances of support for John B. Stephen from sources most unexpected. The feeling in Denver is that the Colorado Springs man is certain to be made Colorado's next Governor.

FOUR OTHER WRECK VICTIMS IDENTIFIED

DENVER, Sept. 24.—G. W. Martin, general agent of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad, tonight announced the following additional identifications of the victims of the wreck on that road near Clayton, Kan., yesterday:

O. E. JACOBSON, Phillipsburg, Kan.

MR. AND MRS. MYERS, Riverton, Ill.

S. H. MAYER, Defiance, O.

ZEIGLER, young girl, Stratton, Colo.

It was learned yesterday from passengers on the ill-fated Rock Island train that none of the injured was from this city. In the hurry and confusion following the wreck, three of the injured, Miss Helen Benson, Mrs. Amy Smith and C. A. Smith, were all listed as Colorado Springs people. Later it was learned that Miss Benson is of Limon and that the two Smiths mentioned do not live here.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidford Hamp of this city, who were said to have been on the wrecked train, arrived here yesterday afternoon. They were on a train following the one which was wrecked.

O. H. Guether, a brother-in-law of W. S. Reynolds of this city, described the wreck. The passengers in the Pullman in which he was riding were badly shaken up, but none was injured. Two other passengers on the train who arrived here yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Coots of Hutchinson, Kan. Mr. Coots is a fireman on the Rock Island, and, with Mrs. Coots, is on his way to Delta on a vacation. In describing the accident, he said that, notwithstanding the fact that several cars were telescoped, the cars did not catch fire, and the lamps in the chair car continued to burn, thus aiding the rescuers to carry out the dead and injured. Several persons were killed in this car.

He says the circumstances of the wreck were exactly similar to that near Eden, Colo., on the Denver and Rio Grande railroad several years ago, when 106 persons were killed or drowned when the train ran into a washout. He believes several of the bodies will not be recovered until the water subsides.

J. C. STUBBS' SON DANGEROUSLY SHOT; ALLEGES ACCIDENT

CLEVELAND, Sept. 24.—Donald P. Stubbs, general agent of the Union Pacific railroad here, was taken from the Union Pacific offices tonight with a probably fatal bullet wound over his heart. Mr. Stubbs declared his wound was the result of an accident. He was alone at the time.

The wounded man, holding one hand over his heart, gasped:

"I am shot; I shot myself accidentally. I need help."

Stubbs was hurriedly removed to a hospital. To the doctors he made a brief statement to the effect that he had been examining a new revolver and had accidentally discharged it. On account of the extreme gravity of his condition, he was not permitted to see any one.

Office in Disorder.

The police broke into Mr. Stubbs' office and found the room in great disorder. Papers and clothes were littered about the floor and the furniture was disarranged. On a table there was a ... box of cartridges from which ... had been taken.

Mr. Stubbs lived with his wife and mother-in-law in a fashionable apartment house. Every effort tonight failed to reach either of the women and no answer could be obtained at the apartment door.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—J. C. Stubbs, traffic director of the Southern Pacific railroad and father of Donald P. Stubbs, could offer no explanation for the shooting of his son.

INDORSE MOVE TO MARK TRAIL

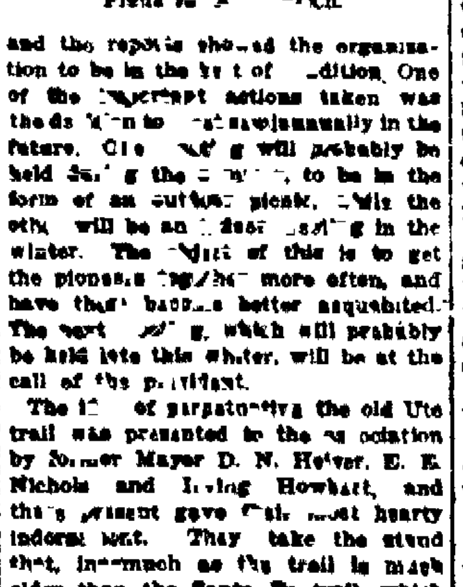

EL PASO PIONEERS HOLD ANNUAL MEETING.

Mrs. Maude McFerran Price Is Elected President; Miss Aiken, Secretary.

A hearty indorsement of the move to mark the old Ute trail was given by the members of the El Paso County Pioneers association at the annual meeting and election of officers yesterday afternoon in the court house. In the absence of President H. A. Wattson, Irving Howbert presided. Mrs. Maude McFerran Price, former secretary and treasurer, was elected president, and Miss Jessie Aiken was made secretary and treasurer.

The meeting was one of the most representative ever held by the association. Among those present were at least a dozen people who have lived in El Paso county or Colorado for at least 50 years. Anthony Bott, who has lived in the state since 1858 ... into that part of the country with the third expedition at the beginning of the gold excitement, and a number of people who were county officers in the early days attended the meeting.

The membership rolls of the association were increased by 20 new names ...

MRS. MAUDE M'FERRAN PRICE,
New President of El Paso County Pioneers Association.

and the reports showed the organization to be in the best of condition. One of the important actions taken was the decision to ... semiannually in the future. One meeting will probably be held during the summer, to be in the form of an outdoor picnic, while the other will be an indoor meeting in the winter. The object of this is to get the pioneers together more often, and have them become better acquainted. The next meeting, which will probably be held late this winter, will be at the call of the president.

The idea of perpetuating the old Ute trail was presented to the association by former Mayor D. N. Heizer, E. E. Nichols and Irving Howbert, and the present gave their most hearty indorsement. They take the stand that, inasmuch as the trail is much older than the Santa Fe trail, which is now being marked, and because of its early associations, it should be

WHITE FIRST WITNESS IN SENATORIAL PROBE

Inquiry Begins Tomorrow Confessed Bribe Taker Will Tell Story of Lorimer Election.

CHICAGO, Sept 24.—When the senatorial investigating committee begins the inquiry into the election of Senator William Lorimer Monday morning it is expected that Rep. Charles A. White, one of the Democratic legislators who voted for Senator Lorimer, will be the first witness to take the stand.

No formal announcement that subpoenas had been served was made today by Chairman Burrows, but it was generally admitted by the senators on the committee that Representative White had been served with a summons to testify and that he would be the initial witness.

Fifteen others, including several legislators, are understood to have been served with summons or to have signified their readiness to testify. H. J. C. Beckemeyer and Michael A. Link, Democratic legislators who testified in the two trials of Rep. Lee O'Neill Browne for bribery, are expected to be among the first to testify.

No difficulty is anticipated in securing witnesses as the committee is empowered to call to its aid the services of any federal court, or its officers, including the United States marshals of any state.

INVOKE RECALL TO OUST MAYOR

SEATTLE'S EXECUTIVE UNDER 1ST BAN.

Commission Plan to Be Adopted by Northwest Metropolis in Spring.

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 24.—The Public Welfare league perfected its plans today for the ousting of Mayor Hiram C. Gill by the recall and the form of the recall petition has been drafted. It will request the removal of the mayor on the ground that he is violating the law and is guilty of malfeasance in office in permitting the existence of a district inhabited by disorderly houses and gambling resorts.

To bring about a recall election 20 per cent of the total vote cast at the election last March must be represented on the petition. The welfare league purposes to have the petition signed at once, but not to present it to the council until January, so that the recall election may be held at the same time as the election to city council.

The city has already decided upon the abolition of the present council and the substitution of a smaller body elected at large.

NOT CHOLERA, CLAIM NAPLES AUTHORITIES

NAPLES, Sept. 24.—Asiatic cholera apparently has taken a strong hold here. Yesterday 50 cases of cholera were reported, with many deaths, and the report today places the number of cases at 100, with 22 deaths.

Several weeks ago it was reported that cholera was prevalent at Naples, and precautionary measures were taken by the authorities. At the same time a bacteriological examination was made in various cases, and it was given out that the disease was gastro-enteritis, which is common here about this season of the year. The authorities do not yet admit that the disease is cholera.

Later reports place the deaths from cholera at 30.

REPORTER BEATEN AND STABBED BY VAGRANTS

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 24.—Courtney Cooper, a reporter on the Kansas City Star, who has been identified with that newspaper's crusade against vagrants and criminals here, was stabbed and severely beaten by a crowd of unidentified men here tonight.

As Cooper was leaving the Star office, a man on the side walk said:

"There goes that reporter; we'll get him."

Cooper was attacked after he had walked two blocks. He was not dangerously hurt.

Scores of vagrants were arrested here today.

MUCH WANTED YOUNG MEN HAVE VANISHED

Two Youths Implicated by Companion in Coast Murder Being Sought.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24.—It was learned late tonight by the police that Dr. James Grant, who is held in prison in connection with the murder of Eva Swan, came to this city about eight months ago from St. Louis where he was known as Robert Thompson. Several months ago he cashed a number of checks on a St. Louis bank signed with the name of Thompson. Grant or Thompson was accompanied to this city by a man known as Dr. Emerson.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24.—With the positive identification tonight at the morgue of the body found buried last night in the rear of a vacant house as the remains of Miss Eva Swan, the last link in the chain of events surrounding the disappearance of the young Paso Robles school teacher was forged. The identification was made by Mrs. C. A. Weir, with whom the missing girl roomed while she was in this city. Earlier in the day Mrs. Weir failed to identify the jewels found on the body. Although the features of the corpse had been badly eaten by the acid, Mrs. Weir unhesitatingly identified the corpse as that of Miss Swan.

Detectives are now centering their efforts on the apprehension of William Saake, who, according to the story told by Bernard Gordan, assisted Dr. Grant in disposing of the remains. Mrs. E. Hughes, an aunt of the Saake youth, was brought to headquarters and for a time denied any knowledge that such a person existed, but finally admitted that Saake was her nephew and had lived at her home. She declared, however, that she knew nothing of his whereabouts. His partner, Gordon, expressed the belief that Saake is in Eugene, Ore.

Efforts are also being made to locate Pike, the mysterious youth who, in company with Gordon and Saake, dogged the steps of Dr. Grant in an unceasing attempt to obtain money from him. According to the story told by Gordon, Pike always acted as the spokesman for the trio in the frequent interviews with Grant, and to him all the payments of money were made.

After viewing the body and visiting the place where it was found, the coroner's jury adjourned to await the production of more evidence.

Dr. Grant and Miss Messerschmidt are still on the detinue book, and unless an effort is made to secure their release on habeas corpus it is not believed that they will be discharged until a verdict is returned by the coroner's jury.

EL PASO, Tex., Sept. 24. A special train bearing 100 delegates from this city and Las Cruces, N. Efforts will be made to prevent the passage of adverse resolutions concerning the project.

JOY RIDE RESULTS IN DEATH OF FOUR

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 24.—All four occupants of a large touring car returning from a lake shore resort to New Orleans early today were drowned, when their car, rounding a curve at a high rate of speed, shot straight ahead and plunged into the new basin canal.

The dead are W. R. Freeman, 35 years, New York city; Thomas Boettler, 43 years, of New Orleans; Dorothy Hall, 21 years old, of New Orleans, and Marian Giblen, 25 years old, of New Orleans.

It was first reported that the car had seven occupants and the canal was dragged for three hours before the four bodies had been found. Later it was established that the four were the only persons in the car when it went into the canal.

Freeman was a traveling salesman and Boettler was in the automobile business. The Hall girl came to New Orleans three years ago from Baton Rouge, La.

Although the bodies remained at the bottom of the canal but a few hours, shrimps and crabs disfigured them to such an extent that they were barely recognizable. The identity of the women was established largely through their wearing apparel and their hair.

INDORSE MOVE

classed among the important historical landmarks. The three men mentioned recently went over the old trail, where it follows up Ruxton creek for a distance, and found that it is plainly discernable, and could easily be located and marked with stones. The question of marking the trail will be given close attention this winter, and if arrangements can be made, the trail will be widened and devoted to a bridle path, it being too steep in places for vehicles.

History of Trail.

In calling attention to the trail, reference was made to the use to which it was put years ago, when the Indians of the plains traversed it into the mountains to war on the Utes in the mountain retreats, and how, it is believed, many fierce battles were waged along its length. Every effort will be made during the coming month to arouse public opinion in favor of the plan to mark the trail.

Those who attended the meeting yesterday were greatly interested in the pioneer exhibit which stands in the lower corridor of the court house, and which is being rapidly enlarged through contributions of exhibits of historical value.

New exhibits were added to the collection yesterday, through the courtesy of Irving Howbert. One of these is three certificates of location on mining claims, made in 1860 and 1861, in this vicinity. The two earlier ones, made in 1860, were filed at a time when all the territory east of the continental divide was included in Kansas, and all west of the divide, in Utah territory. The other exhibit is an autograph letter from Col. J. M. Chivington, commander of the First Colorado regiment when that gallant body of troops saved Colorado from the Confederacy, and who won renown in battles both at Sand Creek and in New Mexico. The body of the letter deals with business matters, but its historical value lies in the fact that the hand of that brave officer signed the name at the end.

The membership of the Pioneers association now numbers about 225, including the new names received yesterday. A residence of 25 years in the state entitles any El Paso county resident to become a member.

COX DRAWS FIRE OF BUCKEYE DEMOCRATS

Governor Harmon Opens Ohio Campaign at Canton in Drizzling Rain.

CANTON, O., Sept. 24.—In the middle of a steady drizzling rain which lasted the entire day, several thousand Democrats marched to the auditorium hall today to listen to Gov. Judson Harmon deliver the first speech of the fall campaign.

The Republicans, under the leadership of Warren G. Harding, gubernatorial nominee, fired their first guns a week ago at Kenton, O.

Governor Harmon confined his address mainly to a review of state issues. He scored the Republican national administration for what he termed its wasteful expenditures and attacked the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill.

Atlee Pomerene, candidate for lieutenant governor, followed Governor Harmon. He made a bitter attack upon George B. Cox of Cincinnati, and incidentally scored President Taft for the alliance which the speaker said the President had made with the Cincinnati leader in 1908. Mr. Pomerene declared that the state of Ohio might be willing to trust Mr. Harding, but it would never trust Harding and Cox.

LINER DISABLED BUT ALL ABOARD ARE SAFE

Big Clyde Line Steamer Huron Breaks Shaft Off North Carolina Coast.

BEAUFORT, N. C., Sept. 24.—Crippled by the breaking of a tail shaft, the big Clyde line steamer Huron, carrying passengers and freight from Jacksonville and Charleston for New York, lay helplessly at anchor tonight 25 miles southwest of Diamond Shoals light off the North Carolina coast. All aboard are safe.

The Huron's sister ships, the Arapahoe and Navahoe, caught by wireless not many miles away from the scene of the accident, were ordered to stand by the disabled liner until the arrival of the wrecking schooner Rescue, which will reach here tomorrow morning. The Huron will be towed to New York.

Robert Taft, son of President Taft, who is flying Chicago-ward these days whenever he gets the opportunity, the reason being, from all accounts, Miss Olive Gardner, daughter of William A. Gardner, vice president of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad. The way that Miss Gardner denies there is any significance in the President's eldest son traveling toward her direction so frequently, is what convinces friends of both there is "something up." "Why, the idea!" says Miss Gardner. "Why, the very idea. Why, we are just friends, you know. The idea, Mr. Taft is indeed a manly young man. But the idea. I like him, and I'm not ashamed to say so. But the idea——"

BRYAN MAKES SPEECH ON ANCIENT HISTORY

Attacks Roosevelt for Guildhall Address Is Now on Way to Pueblo.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Sept. 24.—William J. Bryan in a speech here today devoted much time to the speeches delivered by Col. Theodore Roosevelt in Europe. Referring to the ex-President's utterances in regard to English rule in Egypt in his speech in Guildhall, London, Mr. Bryan said:

"This utterance is an American sound coming from the ex-President places the people of the country in a wrong light as no one stands with him."

TWO WALKING TRACKS, KILLED BY U. P. TRAIN

OGDEN, Utah, Sept. 24.—Two men walking on the Union Pacific tracks were struck by a freight train at Marston, Weber, last night and instantly killed. Neither of the victims has been positively identified, but in the pocket of one was a postal card addressed to Peter Vanderjagt, Ravenna, Mich. The bodies, which were badly mangled, were taken to Rock Springs, Wyo.

Teachers Assigned to Duties: School Begins Tomorrow a. m.

Tomorrow morning at 8:30 o'clock the schools of Colorado Springs and close lying country precincts will be opened for the year, and from all indications it will be the most successful the system has ever known. The last teacher reported for duty yesterday, the final inspection of the buildings has been made, the supplies for the various schools have been put in, and everything is in "shipshape" to receive the students. From the school census taken earlier in the year, which shows a larger school population than ever before, it is believed the enrollment this term will be a record-breaker.

Yesterday morning the teachers and principals, both old and new in the service, met at the High School, where the first general teachers meeting of the year was held, and after organizing and discussing the work to be taken up, spent a pleasant hour becoming better acquainted.

In the afternoon Superintendent C. M. Cole, the new head of the school system, completed the list of assignment of teachers, supervisors and principals

The attention of all students who are entering the High School for the first time is called to the fact that the enrollment list will be made up at the High School Annex, 331 East Pikes Peak avenue, and not at the High School building proper. DELEGATION IS OFF TOMORROW

TO ATTEND PUEBLO IRRIGATION CONGRESS.

City and County Will Be Well Represented at National Gathering.

The committee recently appointed to secure a large delegation to the eighteenth National Irrigation congress which opens tomorrow at Pueblo yesterday, canvassed the business district and found that a large number of the merchants and professional men are planning to attend. It is expected that in the neighborhood of 200 Colorado Springs people will go.

The arrangements announced last night are for those going from this city to take either of two trains. The Santa Fe-Colorado Southern train leaves at 10:35 a. m. and the Denver and Rio Grande train leaves at 10 40 o'clock. Both get into Pueblo at 11 50 a. m. Arriving in the Smelter city, the local delegation will meet at the union depot at noon. The first session of the day, at 2:30 o'clock in the Mineral Palace, will be preceded by a big industrial parade. The delegation from Colorado Springs is expected not only to show the friendly relations between the two towns, but also to aid this city in its fight to secure the 1911 Dry Farming congress

Following are some of the delegates to the congress: Chamber of Commerce, D. V. Donaldson and Alva W. Henderson; Merchants association, A. B. Waterman and L. A. Puffer; Real Estate exchange, F. D. Puffer and John Lennox.

The Chamber of Commerce has arranged to advertise El Paso county at the meeting. An information booth has been established, and stereopticon lectures will be given, telling of the agricultural advantages here. In addition the Fountain Commercial club has collected a large agricultural exhibit.

It is expected that following the adjournment of the congress many of the delegates to the congress will come to Colorado Springs for several days.

IS BOUND OVER TO NEXT GRAND JURY

See Wah, the Chinese laundryman arrested in Colorado City Friday night, on a charge of trafficking in opium and manufacturing a grade of the drug for smoking purposes, was given a hearing in police court yesterday by United States Commissioner T. A. McMorris. He was placed under $1,500 bond to appear for trial before the federal grand jury at its next session. Bail was furnished by "China Jim," a local Chinese merchant. The penalty for the manufacture of opium is a fine of $5,000, three years in the penitentiary, or both. About $500 worth of opium and nearly $400 in cash were found in Wah's laundry, hidden away in nooks and corners, by the officers making the arrest. A number of dead horned toads, which the Chinaman said were used to cure rheumatism, were also found in his place.

An opium joint was also raided following Wah's arrest and opium smoking outfits confiscated by the officers. "Shorty" Roberts, said to be the proprietor of the place, was placed under arrest and taken to the county jail. His case has not come up for hearing.

DO NOT WANT NAME CHANGED

SAY IT SHOULD REMAIN SAN RAFAEL.

Prominent Residents of Street and Members Park Commission Talk.

That opposition to the proposal to change the name of San Rafael street to College street is widespread is evinced by the many unfavorable comments made on the subject yesterday by representative men. In order to learn the true feeling of residents on that street regarding the question, an effort was made yesterday by The Gazette to interview a number of them, but in most instances they were either out of the city or inaccessible. Among those whom unsuccessful attempts were made to see are: James A. Lockhart, Nevada avenue and San Rafael; Mrs. H. L. Bellou, 118 West San Rafael, and Chester Alan Arthur, of Nevada avenue and San Rafael.

In several instances, however, the parties looked for were reached, and the following are their opinions on the subject:

Judge H. G. Lunt, president park commission—"I do not believe it is a very good idea to change the name of that street. It is a name that is characteristic, and I think it should remain as it is."

D. V. Donaldson, member park commission—"I am emphatically opposed to any move to change the name of that street or any other street in the city. The people are used to it. The names are very well selected, and add rather a charm to the city."

Godfrey Kissell, Tejon and San Rafael streets "I think it is a mighty good idea to circulate among the old-timers of the city and get their opinions on this subject, for you will find most of them opposed to the idea of changing the name of San Rafael street, or any other street. And if the sentiment is shown now, it will act as a preventative for future actions of this kind. We are unique in the names of our street. In Paris some time since I sent my card to a business man, and he immediately recognized that I was from Colorado Springs by seeing the name 'North Tejon street' on it. I have spoken to at least a dozen people on this subject today, and all of them are utterly opposed to the idea."

In speaking of the comment about changing the street name, Commissioner Lawton, to whom the matter was referred by the Council, said:

"When the matter came before the Council on Wednesday, it seemed as though a majority of the Council was in favor of the change but the only action taken at the meeting was to refer the petition to me for my subsequent report.

"So far as I am concerned, the street will not be changed. I like the old Spanish names and see no reason why San Rafael should be confused with San Miguel or any other name bearing the same prefix."

Sleeping out of doors has been made simple by the Out West Tent & Awning Co. Investigate.

FOUNDER BESHEARS CAMP IN THIS CITY

That Colorado Springs, as a city, is better represented in the new camp than any other place in the state, is the declaration made last night by James Beshears, discoverer of the gold camp bearing his name, on Lincoln mountain, five miles north of Georgetown. According to Mr. Beshears, the camp is now past the experimental stage and is settling down to what appears will be a long life. The discoverer of the camp, who has been in the city for several days, leaves tomorrow for Beshears.

Among Colorado Springs people who are interested in the belt are J. H. Weigert, C. J. Tiffany and J. A. Cummings. They control six claims, and it is believed that shipping ore will be struck on most of these at a depth of not more than 20 feet. In the last three months seven shipping mines have been developed with ore that runs on an average of 16 at 18 feet. It is expected that the average shipping depth all over the camp will be about 40 feet. The belt is about a mile and a half wide by eight miles long, and is located between the Georgetown and Empire silver belts. There are now 125 people in the camp, and considerable building is under way.

Beshears, who arrived at Cripple Creek on June 5, 1891 where he located 32 mines, among them the Elkton, El Paso and Work groups, discovered the new camp in February of this year, and moved in on March 22. He predicts that it will be a second Cripple Creek and expects to realize great wealth from his 32 claims there.

Wilbur's

A Special Demonstration of Wilbur Millinery Values

Showing that our extensive business relations with the best millinery houses in the country, combined with our own perfectly appointed workrooms and corps of capable designers and trimmers, put us in a position to offer values not to be found elsewhere at anything like the prices we quote. We feature Monday and this week a line of fall and winter models at the popular price of

$5.00 each

And while most of them are exclusively Wilbur hats, a few of them—or ones quite similar—may possibly be seen in other stores, but at about double the above price. In fact any hat in this collection if duplicated elsewhere quality for quality—would cost $8.50 to $15.00, and would still lack the style, individuality and character of a Wilbur hat.

At 8:30 a. m. Monday and not a minute sooner, this line goes on sale, with the distinct understanding that telephone orders will not be taken for any hat displayed for this event. First comers secure first choice, although later purchasers will not be disappointed, as there's not a hat in the lot that any woman would hesitate to wear on the occasion for which it is designed.

WILBUR Wearing Apparel Correctly Represents Fall and Winter Styles

No matter what the occasion may require, the proper gown for that event may more than likely be found in our stock. While our showing of the more conservative styles is greater than can be seen in half the stocks in Colorado Springs combined we by no means confine ourselves to these lines. We specialize along the line of high art novelties and extremes—models that are out of the question in the average stocks about town exclusive things that are seldom seen outside the great fashion centers. Those are reasons why the best-dressed women look to this store to supply their wardrobes from season to season. This is why our business is increasing at such a splendid rate. And with all Wilbur garments cost no more than the ordinary kinds as a look through will readily prove.

A FAMILIAR WARNING

From the Youth's Companion

Mrs Jones' favorite warning to her young progeny when they were in mischief was that she would tend to them in a minute. "Tending" was accomplished by applying her open hand where it would do the most good. When Harry was 4 years old he was sent for the first time round the corner to the grocery. In a few minutes he came trotting soberly back with the nickel still in his hand, but no bag of onions.

"What's the matter?" asked his mother.

"I'm 'fraid of the man," he said solemnly.

"Oh, he won't hurt you," assured Mrs. Jones. "Run along and bring the onions. I'm in a hurry for them."

"I'm 'fraid of the grocer man," he explained, as before.

"Well, what makes you afraid of him?" demanded his mother, impatiently

"Why," answered the little fellow, "both times when I goed in, he looked at me, an' said 'I'll tend to you in a minute'"

IRRIGATION IS A MIRACLE WORKER

CONGRESS OPENS TOMORROW

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

When the gavel falls tomorrow at Pueblo, Colo., calling the eighteenth National Irrigation congress into annual session, the earliest and the latest ages of American history will clasp hands over the gulf of intervening generations. It was the Pueblo Indians who first practiced the art of irrigation on American soil. When the white man first looked upon this continent he beheld within its borders a civilization of unknown antiquity. That civilization was based upon an irrigation ditch; the latest achievement of twentieth-century civilization is the modern irrigated farm.

Experts in the irrigation world are proud of the results accomplished in their field of endeavor. The irrigated area of the earth is estimated at about 75,000,000 acres. Of this, one-fifth lies within the boundaries of continental United States. With 15,000,000 acres already fully or partially irrigated, there yet remains an estimated area of 40,000,000 acres susceptible to irrigation. Of course the easiest accomplished projects have received first attention, and the cost of future work will become greater and greater as the years go by, until only the more difficult projects remain. It is estimated upon the recent census returns that 3,000,000 people are living from the crops grown on the lands made fertile by irrigation. Half of these, 300,000 families in all, live upon the land directly, while the other half populate the cities and towns supplying the commercial wants of those living upon the land. If the same ratio is maintained, lands to be irrigated in the future will be supporting a population of 10,000,000 souls a score of years hence. Already the crops grown from irrigated lands in the United States approximate a quarter of a billion dollars a year in value.

An Empire in Prospect.

Add to the irrigated area and the region susceptible to irrigation, the 80,000,000 acres of swamp land which may be made available for cultivation, and we have an empire in prospect. The day was when the arid and semi-arid lands of the west and the swamp lands of the east were regarded as the waste places of the nation. But in the light of twentieth-century methods, these lands are destined to become the granaries of the country. The arid and semi-arid lands, for unnumbered generations drinking up the moisture borne down to them by the melting of perpetual snows, have become veritable treasure-houses of plant food. The water of the irrigation ditch, laden with the mineral substances brought down with in from the mountain, is the golden key that unlocks these treasure-houses, and makes possible an agriculture unequaled in non-arid regions. Likewise, lands that have been under water for ages, are covered deeply with alluvial deposits brought down from the mountains, or with the rich remains of myriads of beings that inhabit sea water.

It is the aim of the Irrigation congress to arouse the nation to the possibilities of these waste places. Colorado well may play host to the congress, for within its boundaries there are more acres of irrigated territory than in any other American commonwealth. The statistics of the department of agriculture show that its three and a half million acres of irrigated land are the mainstay of its agriculture. The state averaged $18.65 per acre on its wheat crop last year, as compared with $9 in Minnesota, $12.19 in Wisconsin, $11.22 in Illinois, and $8.96 in Kansas. The average yield of oats was valued at $15.98, as compared with $10.69 in Wisconsin, and so on down, the scale for all the middle western states. For barley the per acre yield was valued at $19.12, as compared with $13.95 for Wisconsin, and for hay it was $19.47, against $13.14 in Wisconsin, the best yielding state in the Middle West.

Many Object Lessons.

There will be many interesting lessons of the possibility of irrigation shown in the big exposition that is a part of the Irrigation congress. Colorado will tell of a potato yield of 847 bushels to the acre in the San Luis valley, and a Rocky Ford canteloupe yield, the profits of which would make Midas seem a pauper in comparison. Washington will exhibit products from the finest orchards in the world, and Nevada, New Mexico, California, Utah, Montana, Idaho, and other states will illustrate by photographs and by products what a great agent irrigation is in empire building. Then there will be an exhibit of every kind of irrigation machinery the world has to offer—ditch diggers, water raisers, and many other appliances that aid the land to make wonderful yields.

There are many projects to be undertaken, awaiting the word of the federal congress. A 500,000-acre tract in the Sacramento valley, a 750,000-acre tract on the Colorado river, 300,000 acres in the Lake Basin, Montana, a 200,000-acre tract in the San Joaquin valley, California, and a similar sized one in Oregon, 500,000 acres in Nevada, to say nothing of many projects of 100,000 acres or less, call for aggregate appropriations amounting to more than $125,000,000. In addition to these there are about 10,000,000 acres which are to be put under irrigation by private enterprise, half of it within the next five years. When the present plans are carried out the private project in the Horse Heaven country, Washington, will be the largest private enterprise in the United States, with an acreage of 600,000 and a cost of approximately $20,000,000.

A Roseate Vision.

But ambitious as these projects seem, they are as nothing compared with the visions of the future as seen by such men as former Governor Adams of Colorado. He states that some day a modern Sesostris or Nebuchadnezzar will rise up and his first step will be to tap the upper Missouri, bring its floods down through the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas and Texas, making the canal that carries these waters a great highway of commerce and a fertility-carrier to millions of acres of land. And then he sees every foot of irrigable land, even in the non-arid regions of the United States, irrigated by the waters of rivers and creeks, supplementing the supply from the skies, and thus transforming the entire farming region of the nation into a garden of plenty.

Of course such a program lies many years in the future, but as the population multiplies history will repeat itself. Wherever population has grown so dense among agricultural people that ordinary farming methods would not suffice, irrigation has been resorted to. We read of the country around Babylon being a network of irrigation ditches long before Rome or Athens and their civilizations were dreamed of. In Egypt, China, Italy, India—wherever unusual demands have been made upon the land, the irrigation ditch has become the constable that has collected these drafts. Even in the days when Herodotus visited Egypt the art of artificially supplying the land with water had reached such perfection that he saw in Lake Moeris a man-made reservoir covering 10,000 square miles, and holding 300 feet of water—enough to accommodate the flow of the mighty Nile for six months. Beside that project, Gatun dam, the great reservoir of the Panama canal, with its hundred-foot dam and its big lake, seems nothing more than a small frog pond; while the Roosevelt project of the Gunnison tunnel seem but childish creations in some tiny brooklet.

Better Than Rain.

One of the greatest advantages of irrigation is that the water which flows down from the mountains is much more beneficial to the growing crops than that which comes from the clouds. The supply not only can be regulated to the exact needs of the land, but as the water trickles down through mountain soil and bubbles up through the mouths of myriad springs, it gathers rich treasures of potash, nitrogen and phosphorus, and bears them on to the hungry soil where they are made available as food for the growing crops.

Although the United States now leads the world in the number of acres of irrigated land under cultivation, other countries are awakening to its possibilities. Lord Cromer has announced that the reconstructed Egypt has increased the regions fertilized by the Nile from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000 acres. In Alberta, Canada, the Canadian Pacific, headed by a hustling young Irish American, is solving a tremendous problem in the irrigation of the Bow River region. This one project is five times larger than the combined national and private projects in Utah, and one-third as great as the entire irrigated area of the United States. The work in Canada is being carried forward so extensively that Director Newell of the reclamation service, admitted not long ago that the United States could not hope to equal it. Here we build a dam and the government turns it over to the water-users' association. But there is no guarantee behind it. The water may suffice at all times; and then again it may not. It may cost a dollar, or it may cost more. In Canada the supply of water is guaranteed, and the cost is to be the stated sum of 50 cents.

But we have assurance that Uncle Sam has his outlooks upon the watch-towers of Progress, and that whatever is new in the irrigation world that offers success when applied on American projects will be taken advantage of. While there is little likelihood that the tide of sturdy citizens that is flowing across the border into western Canada will be stayed there will be plenty of others to take their places.

The latest development of warfare—the Krupp gun, mounted on a powerful armored automobile, and leveled so as to hit dirigibles and aeroplanes. The gun, in a revolving turret, will be used at the French army maneuvers within a few days. Experiments have already been made with it following the German army maneuvers and the report is that it has been demonstrated to be a most effective agent in destroying the aerial contingent of an enemy. While the invention is said to be one from the Krupp manufactories, French inventors have also been at work, and produced results fully as satisfactory after another plan.

"THE SPENDTHRIFT" GOOD; POORLY ACTED

Porter Emerson Browne's "The Spendthrift" which was presented at the Opera House yesterday afternoon and evening, will make a strong appeal to those who think that the feminine is the weaker sex and that woman is foolish, and incapable of a single serious thought or ambition. The author, however, believes that there is hope for womankind and that the most insipid and shallow member of this sex may, by the coming of a vital crisis into her life, be awakened from a present dead existence and blossom forth a rare bloom of life.

However, woman need not necessarily be the subject of regeneration, for such a problem may well exist among the members of the opposite sex. Furthermore the author need not choose a woman for such a drama from the ranks of high society, unless it be his purpose to make the contrast of the two extremes of poverty and wealth, of social position and neglect, the more dramatic. Such butterflies, frivolous, shallow, silly, insipid, lacking even ordinary good sense, without a thought for anything but clothes and self, incapable of real emotion of understanding genuine feeling, abound everywhere, amongst men as well as women, in and out of good society. This is one of the terrible tragedies of life; the prevalence of such stupid, uninteresting people in all walks of humanity.

"The Spendthrift" is based upon a problem of vital importance today; extravagance, but it is not so much this weakness in the character of the wife as her other weaknesses that bring about the tragic climax of the drama. Unfortunately the play was poorly acted yesterday and consequently it suffered much, for it is a drama which requires the most intelligent handling possible in order to bring out the finer meanings and contrasts of character. Hence the regeneration of the wife seemed almost false, so badly had the actress played the earlier scenes and so incompletely did she show the final change of her inner being. However, this failure to make the change in the woman complete and acceptable is partly the fault of the dramatist for in the first three acts, not a single glimpse of real character was shown in the woman which would make such a change plausible.

The cast last evening was of ordinary ability. Doris Mitchell in the title role is incapable of playing such a part. For some time, one could not determine whether she was Salome in evening dress; Cleopatra in a modern drawing room, or merely a painful imitation of the great Russian Nasimova. She was always impossible; in walk, in speech and in action. She failed to put any sympathy into the role of the spendthrift; to make any appeal for the possibility of the existence of such a woman. Lionel Adams as the husband, carefully walks and talks through the play, fearful lest he shall overstep his conscientious interpretation and touch the tragic note of the role. He narrowly escapes becoming tedious. Vivian Martin of winsome personality, floats through the drama and together with Lizzie McCall as the Betty Green of Wall Street fame, scores the success of the evening. The remaining members of the cast are ordinary. The settings are neither as rich nor as complete as one expects from the hands of Frederic Thompson, manager of "The Spendthrift."

MIXED VERDICT IN DOCK FRAUD CASES

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—One former customs official acquitted and two convicted on one count each in the indictment against them was the result of the customs fraud underweighing trial concluded in the United States circuit court here today by the verdict of a jury rendered to Judge Martin.

George E Bedell, who was chief clerk under former Deputy Surveyor Vail, was acquitted on the charge of having conspired to defraud the government through systematic underweighing of imports. His co-defendants, Charles H. Wardell and Charles D. Drew, former assistant weighers in the customs service were each found guilty of an overt act in connection with the conspiracy.

The case, after a trial lasting several days, went to the jury yesterday.

It appeared from evidence at the trial that importers of cheese, lemons and other articles of food had paid large sums in the course of several years to government weighers as an inducement for the latter to underweigh imports and thus defraud the customs.

TERRIFIC GALE ON UPPER LAKE HURON

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 24.—Dispatches from ports on Lake Huron state that one of the worst gales of the season is raging on the upper lake. The only accident so far reported is the breaking up of a big lumber raft in Saginaw bay, valued at $60,000, and the loss of the deckload on the schooner Levi Wilson.

DYSPEPSIA IS RELIEVED IN FIVE MINUTES

Indigestion and All Other Stomach Distress Goes After Taking a Little Diapepsin.

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of Indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach, if you will take a little Diapepsin occasionally.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea, Indigestion (like a lump of lead in the stomach), Biliousness, Heartburn, Water brash, Pain in stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. A single dose will digest all the food you eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour and upset the stomach.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist and start taking now, and in a little while you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you than can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

Should you at this moment be suffering from Indigestion or any stomach disorder, you can get relief within five minutes.

BALLINGER NOT PRORING FRAUD

SECRETARY ADMITS THE FACT CANDIDLY.

Back at Capitol, Says He Knows Nothing of New Alaskan Inquiry.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—If there is imminent another investigation of Alaskan land cases, as reported from Spokane, Secretary Ballinger says he has not been informed concerning it. The secretary arrived in Washington today from a long stay in the west and at once plunged into the work of the interior department, familiarizing himself with what was done in his absence and preparing for the series of cabinet meetings which will begin Monday.

Washington, Oregon, California and other western states, so far as they relate to matters coming under the direction of the interior department, were inspected by Secretary Ballinger. He reported much progress generally. The board of army engineers which is inspecting reclamation projects will finish its work about November 1 and soon thereafter report.

As to the matters to be discussed at the coming cabinet meeting Mr. Ballinger said that no information had been given to him as to what would be taken up.

OHIO CANDIDATES ON RECORD AGAINST DICK

CLEVELAND, Sept. 24.—The Republican candidates to the legislature from Cuyahoga county (Cleveland) in a meeting here today passed resolutions pledging themselves to vote against Senator Charles Dick's re-election. The only two candidates absent were declared to be in full sympathy with the rest.

Senator Dick was the only person who complied with the primary law regulations and therefore is the sole senatorial candidate, but his opponents declare they will ignore the primary.

Senator Theodore Burton has already announced that he will take no part in the election.

ADMIT KILLING BUT CLAIM SELF-DEFENSE

PHOENIX, Ariz., Sept. 24.—Sheriff Thompson of Gila county, having in custody William Stewart and James Steele arrived here tonight from Adams [illegible] on his way to Globe. The men admit killing Fred Kibbe and A. F. [illegible] cattlemen, at Ford station, September 15, and taking their guns, ammunition and horses when they fled. They claim self-defense, saying a squarrel arose over a dog. Kibbe and Hilliot drawing their weapons first.

"MATERITY HOSPITALS" UNDER INVESTIGATION

DENVER, Sept. 24.—After 24 hours' investigation of the mystery surrounding the finding of several infants' bodies in city sewers, the police are inclined to the opinion that there is an institution in Denver doing business under the guise of a "maternity hospital" that is deliberately trafficking in the disposition of babies whose mothers want them put out of the way. Every institution of this nature in the city is being rigidly investigated.

OREGON SYSTEM CHAMPION WINS

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 24.—The indications are that A. W. Lafferty, antiassembly candidate for the Republican nomination for congressman for the Second district of Oregon, has won over W. R. Ellis, incumbent, who supported the faction of the party known as the "assembly," which opposes the so-called "Oregon system" of electing United States senators.

Running almost on a par with Ellis, according to early returns, is former United States Marshal Charles J. Reed. Reed adopted the slogan "insurgent" and made his campaign on an "anti-Cannon" platform. George Shepperd, who appealed to the members of his party as a plain "Republican," is running far behind.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 24.—If first returns are an indication of how the political wind is blowing in the state primaries, which were held today, Jay Bowerman, Republican candidate for governor on the so-called assembly ticket, has defeated Albert Abraham, who ran under a Roosevelt-Hughes banner.

The assembly and antiassembly fight is a state issue, and has to do with the method of selecting United States senators. Bowerman is running well ahead of Abraham in the Portland district and in Multnomah county.

Grant B. Dimick and B. Hofer are the two other candidates on the Republican side.

By the same uncertain figures, A. W. Lafferty has defeated W. R. Ellis for congressman in the Second district, Ellis is the incumbent and is running on the assembly ticket. Lafferty is straight antiassembly. Reed, insurgent, is third in the race.

ALL MY PIMPLES GONE

"I was ashamed of my face," writes Minnie Pickard of Altamahaw, N. C. "It was all full of pimples and scars, but after using D. D. D. Prescription I can say that now there is no sign of that Eczema, and that was three years ago."

D. D. D. has become so famous as a cure and instant relief in Eczema and all other serious skin diseases that its value is sometimes overlooked in clearing up rash, pimples, blackheads, and all other minor forms of skin impurities.

The fact is, that while D. D. D. is so penetrating that it strikes to the very root of Eczema or any other serious trouble, the soothing Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol and other ingredients are so carefully compounded, there is no wash for the skin made that can compare with this great household remedy for every kind of skin trouble.

D. D. D. is pleasant to use, perfectly harmless to the most delicate skin, and absolutely reliable. It should always be kept on hand. By a recent arrangement with the D. D. D. Laboratories of Chicago, you can now get a trial size for 25 cents. This will give you positive proof of the wonderful effectiveness of this great remedy.

PETITION FOR WALSH PARDON IS PRESENTED

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—A petition to the president of the United States for the pardon of John R. Walsh, the former president of the Chicago National bank, now in the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., was filed at the department of justice today by Attorney George T. Buckingham of Chicago, on behalf of Mary L. Walsh, Richard W. Walsh and John W. Walsh, respectively the wife and sons of the prisoner.

Accompanying the formal application for a pardon were thousands of letters from individuals in Chicago and throughout the middle west urging President Taft to grant the petition.

The file of these letters comprised 25 bound volumes. Besides letters from personal friends and business associates there were letters from all the officers and directors of the Walsh banks which were involved in the case, letters from the bank's stockholders and depositors, and jurors who found Walsh guilty of a violation of the United States banking laws in having made excessive loans to railroads in which he was interested and in December, 1909, he was sentenced to five years in Leavenworth prison.

Walsh is 73 years old and the main motive in the appeal to President Taft is based on the prisoner's failing health. He is reported as suffering from acute heart disease and physicians affirm in the petition that he is likely to die at any moment.

As set forth in the petition the grounds on which his pardon is asked, are as follows:

That the crime for which he was found guilty does not involve moral turpitude and that none of the acts on which conviction was based were done for or resulted in any profit to himself.

That the depositors in all the banks with which he was connected were paid in full and immediately.

That the loss of nearly all his own large personal fortune, caused by the forced liquidations of these banking institutions is equivalent to a financial fine many times in excess of any usually imposed and is in itself a most severe punishment already suffered.

That his loss of power, prestige and position together with the humiliation of a conviction and imprisonment is a punishment already suffered greatly in excess of the usual.

That the rocking strain of the four years' struggle to save his personal name as well as to save loss to parties interested has at his advanced age so seriously affected his health that a continued imprisonment is likely to result fatally.

WILLIAM NICHOLS DIES

William Nichols, 93 years old, and since 1902 a resident of this city, died early this (Sunday) morning, at St. Francis hospital. He was the step-grandfather of Gustin, Earl and Ben Tucker, all of this city, and is also survived by a daughter, Miss Jennie Nichols of Mt. Pleasant, Pa., and by a step-granddaughter, Mrs. Ethel Molineux of Denver.

Born in Westmoreland county, Pa., in 1817, he served through the civil war, and was severely wounded at Gettysburg. He moved to Kansas, Kan., in 1885 and to this city in 1902. About two years ago he was knocked down by a crowd trying to stop a runaway. Sustaining a fracture of the thigh and since has been confined to his bed in St. Francis hospital. Old age was the immediate cause of death.

The funeral services will be held from Carrington undertaking rooms at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

INCUBATOR BABY SHOW PROMOTERS ARE FINED

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 24.—Fines and costs aggregated $243 were assessed against Dr. H. K. Snyder and his wife of Pittsburg, Pa., who conducted an incubator show at the state fair last week in which three babies died, by Magistrate Flesher today.

The doctor's wife was fined $1 and costs on nine warrants charging the same offense. Twelve warrants against the two charging willful injury to the three babies were dismissed.

Miss Lena Heffner, one of the nurses, testified that when any of the babies died they sent to a hospital in Pittsburg and got a new lot. She told of one trip she made from Columbus, O., to Pittsburg for three babies when the supply they had on hand had given out.

AFTER THE HONEYMOON

Married Life The First Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Hardman
Request Your Presence
At the Marriage of Their Daughter
Estelle to Mr. William A. Carter
on Thursday Evening, September the 1st Nineteen Hundred and Ten at Eight-thirty o'Clock.

Helen read this with a cry of surprise.

"Estelle Hardman is going to be married!" She handed the invitation across the breakfast table to Warren. And to Will Carter!"

Warren glanced at it and laid it aside.

"Well," sipping his coffee, "he's a pretty decent sort of a chap, isn't he?"

"Yes, I suppose so—but not at all the kind of man I thought Estelle would marry."

"Well, she's not as young as she was—her choice may be limited."

"Oh, Warren, how unkind!"

"It's true, isn't it?"

"You've always disliked her!"

"Oh, I wouldn't put it as strong as that, I merely never fancied her—that's all."

"But why?" Helen filling her empty cup. "She talks too much and doesn't always tell the truth."

Hitting at Her Failings.

"Yes, she does talk a great deal!" Helen admitted. "But I didn't know she was untruthful."

"She exaggerates and tells things always a little different from what they are."

Helen flushed, uncomfortably conscious that she, too, had that failing to some extent.

"But, dear, all women exaggerate and prevaricate more or less about little things—they are not as exact and literal as men."

"Well, I have no tolerance for untruthfulness in any form. There's no excuse for it. If, as you say, most women prevaricate then I certainly hope that you are an exception."

Helen crumbled her toast nervously. She knew that she was not an exception, that she was often far from truthful in her statements. Never about anything serious, but in harmless, trivial ways she often resorted to the little evasions and subterfuges that are the stock-in-trade of most women.

With Warren she tried always to be exactly literal. She knew and feared his stern disapproval of any deviation from the truth. But she feared, too, that sooner or later she would forget and unconsciously slip into some slight falsehood or equivocation which he would detect.

And now anxious to change the subject, she asked nervously:

"What shall we get for a wedding present? You know Estelle and her mother gave us that silver vase."

He frowned. "The Hardmans are wealthy—we can't afford anything so expensive."

"But we can't send anything cheap!"

"But something simple and in good taste. It needn't be expensive. They wouldn't expect it."

"Well, what would you suggest?"

He hesitated. "Oh, I can't think of anything just now—something useful and inexpensive. This idea of giving extravagant presents because others do is all wrong. Gifts should be a free expression of one's good will they shouldn't be forced or beyond one's means."

"Yes, I know—but if you'll give me some idea of what to get."

"I told you," irritably, "I couldn't think of anything just now. But there are plenty of useful and simple things. Look through the shops a dozen things will suggest themselves."

"About what do you think we should pay?"

"Oh, not more than five or six dollars."

"Five or six dollars! Why, Warren, I couldn't get anything for that! I'd rather not send anything at all!"

"That will suit me quite as well. Our expenses have been heavy enough in furnishing this apartment. I've no intention of adding to them by elaborate wedding presents."

He pushed back his chair and rose from the table. "It's after nine, I'll be late as it is."

He kissed her coldly, perfunctorily, and was gone.

Five or six dollars for a wedding present for Estelle Hardman! The angry color flamed in her cheeks. And the vase she had given them had cost thirty at least!

The Wedding Present Found.

Was Warren as mercenary as that? Their expenses had been heavy, of course but they had planned for that. And now—

"Which one of them silver bread plates, ma'am, did you say for me to use?" Anna had come in and was clearing off the table.

"Oh, yes, Anna, why that one—there on the end of the sideboard. It's plainer than the others and easier to keep polished. I'll put the other two away in the china closet. We don't need them all out."

And then like a flash came the thought—why not send Estelle one of the silver bread plates! They had received three as wedding presents. They would never need them all.

She rushed over to the sideboard. The one Warren's Uncle Joe had given them! Fortunately it was not engraved. She would take it to a silversmith's at once and have it marked with Estelle's initials.

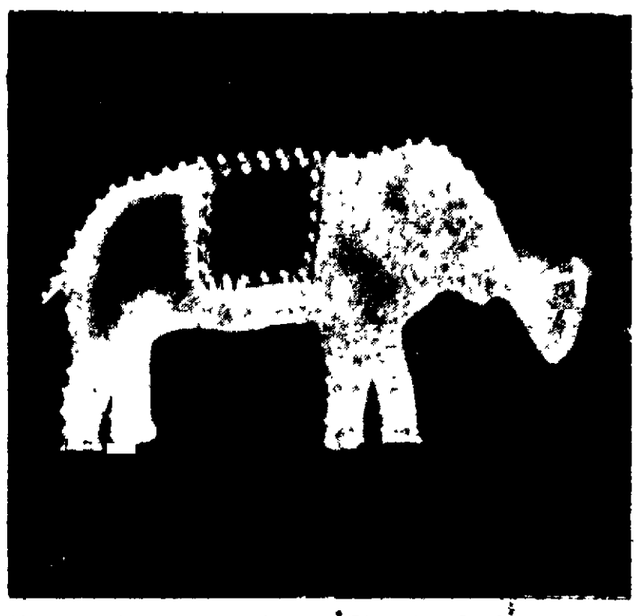

Warren would be furious if he knew. But he would never miss it. He need never know.

And it wasn't wrong she assured herself, trying to silence an uneasy dissatisfaction. She had often heard of people giving away their duplicate wedding presents. She felt uncomfortable when she thought of how Warren would view such a thing. But Warren was unnecessarily strict about many things, and besides he need never know!

She Embarked on the Sea of Deceit in a Bread Dish.

The Pretty Cook Scores

And the Grocery Boy is Dismissed.

"Good evening, Evelina," said the grocery boy, genially, as he dumped his basket on the kitchen floor. "It's a fine, large morning this morning, ain't it?"

"About the usual size as far as I can see," replied the pretty cook. "You've got a fine, large nerve, though, dumping trash all over when I've just scrubbed. It's a wonder you wouldn't get a little sense some time."

"It certainly is strange," admitted the grocery boy. "I've been noticing it myself for some time. The minute I meet you I don't seem to know what I'm doing. If I'd opened that oven door and put the beefsteak in there it wouldn't have surprised me. If I'd put it in the sink and tried to fill it with water it wouldn't occur to me that I was doing anything out of the common unless you hit me a jolt with the bald end of the broom, or something like that."

"I'll find worse than a broom handle to jolt you with," declared the pretty cook.

"You take it when I get out into the alley and I'm all right," said the grocery boy. "I'm equal to any proposition you've a mind to put up to me. I know what's the right thing to do, and I do it. I know what's the right thing to say, and I say it."

Her Stinging Retort.

"You'd better camp in the alley if it works on you that way," advised the pretty cook. "I believe there's lots of people would be willing to bring your meals out to you."

"It ain't the alley," said the grocery boy. "It's getting out of your sphere of influence. It's not hearing your voice and not not seeing your face that does the business. There ain't nothing to rattle me and throw my thinkwheels out of gear and make my heart beat quick when you ain't around, and then everybody wonders how I ever got time to learn all I know about everything."

"That's easy," remarked the pretty cook. "It didn't take me no time and that reminds me—talking about time."

"I was just going to ask you what you needed in our line," said the grocery boy, fluttering the leaves of his order book with an intensely businesslike air. "We have some fresh toothpicks and the season's pick of peanuts, fine and juicy."

"New-Laid Linoleum."

"I'll tell you what I want, and that's some new-laid eggs," said the pretty cook.

"I'm sorry, Evelina," said the grocery boy, sadly, "but the only thing we've got new-laid is a square of linoleum in front of the old mans desk, and that's but a down-trodden piece. I don't suppose linoleum would do, would it?"

"Have you any lemons," asked the pretty cook, unwillingly.

"I'm still discovering the one you handed me yesterday morning," said the grocery boy.

Honest to goodness! I'll hand you something you won't like if you don't quit your foolishness," threatened the pretty cook. "Have you any lemons or haven't you?"

"California or Florida or imported?" asked the grocery boy. "Say, put that dipper down! Sure we've got 'em. Got guaranteed eggs, too. Want a dozen of each? All right. You see how foolish it is to lose your temper. I wonder what it is about red-headed persons makes 'em so touchy. Not that you're red headed Evelina. But some persons are and they're most generally on the right. Still, that don't explain my symptoms. It don't tell me why I have these fluttery feelings the moment I come in here or why I'm losing my appetite and staying awake nights. How would you like me to put that, Evelina?"

Talk It Away.

"I'll tell you," said the pretty cook, kindly. "You just sit down on that chair and keep talking until you feel better. Don't mind me. I can work just the same as if you weren't here. It's only when I try to pay attention to what you are saying that you bother me. When you get through you can put down one large can of pie pumpkin, a package of shredded cocoanut, a jar of peanut butter, 10 pounds of granulated sugar and five bars of laundry soap. That's all."

The grocery boy heaved a prodigious sigh and made a note of the articles mentioned. "The only thing I can think of is that it's tardy action," he said. "If them pies of yours doesn't look so good, I don't believe I eat any more of 'em, even to please you."

UNCLE JOE AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

In the course of a speech at Springfield, Ill., Friday, Speaker Cannon paid his respects to the newspapers:

"Do not let any man think I am abusing the press. It has its legitimate place. If I were to write it, even though I should live to be as old as Methuselah, God knows I never would get even with the press. If there is any counsel that is necessary to be given in this time of history, with the many false prophets abroad, with denunciation and with hot fire all over the country, with our Democratic opponents attacking us and seeking to tear down, when they never have, in my lifetime, demonstrated any capacity to build up—if there ever was a time in place when the command that was given to the children of Israel to move forward should be heeded, it should be now."

There was a time when Uncle Joe thought better of the newspapers. That was three or four years ago, before they got to know him so well. They had to dilate on his alleged physical resemblance to Lincoln, his homespun ways, his blunt, homely frankness, his honesty and sincerity. Oh, they were all beautifully fooled by Uncle Joe, no doubt about that, for, although he had been in Congress since way back in the beginning of things, he had never been Speaker only a short time. He had not yet had a chance to show his hand, and neither the newspapers nor the country had learned that back of the homespun farmer makeup, the honest, unsophisticated "Uncle Joe" disguise, lay the shrewd, practical politician, hand-in-glove with every reactionary influence that worked in and through the Republican party.

But it was not long until the Speaker's attitude toward pending legislation and his frank assumption of the role of Czar opened the eyes of the newspaper men. The correspondents who sit daily in the press gallery of the House are mostly men of long experience, trained observers who have been reporting the doings of Congress too long to make many mistakes in their estimates of public men. They recognized in "Uncle Joe," the plain-spoken, homespun, country lawyer, a fraud and a sham, and through the disguise they saw the real Cannon—and they promptly let the country know about it.

ATTITUDE OF THE PRESS.

If the newspapers have been severe in their judgments of Cannon and Cannonism the Speaker has only himself to blame. Contrary to the opinion of an uninformed few, the press of the nation does not "get it in" for a man and then proceed to harry him into oblivion. When the press unites in condemnation of a public man, as it has in the case of Cannon and that of Ballinger, it is much like a trial by jury. In the beginning some papers have leanings one way or the other, according to their partisan affiliations, but these are wholly open-minded. There is always a perfectly free, and sometimes heated, discussion in the editorial columns, finally resulting in a crystallization of opinion. Of course, there is no such thing as unanimity; there cannot be; but usually there is a preponderance of opinion for or against the man on trial, and usually, too, it is emphatically supported by public opinion.

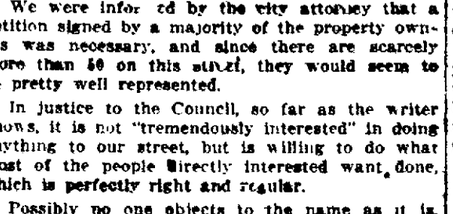

Mr. Cannon has had his day in court. He has been speaking for himself, and his acts have been speaking for him, for many years. He cannot complain of a packed jury, for when he was elected to the chair over the House he was, as he has boasted, the most popular man in the country, next to President Roosevelt, as shown by the press comments." What little of his popularity and prestige is due to himself alone, to his own preference. He chose to serve the interests which prey upon the people, and at the time when the people were calling loudest for public men of his knowledge and experience to serve them. He has secured a renomination, and doubtless he will be re-elected to Congress. But he will never again be Speaker and his influence even as a congressman will be lower than it was before his elevation to his present high station. He knows this, and in the depths of his chagrin blames the newspapers. Happily, they can afford to stand it.

EL PASO AT THE STATE FAIR.

EL PASO COUNTY'S capture of first prize for agricultural exhibit at the State Fair at Pueblo will probably be as much of a surprise here at home as anywhere else, simply because the agricultural development of that county has been made so gradually right in Colorado Springs few people are aware of it. The transformation wrought in a few years by irrigation and dry farming is wonderful. It will interest the traveler on a southbound train from Colorado Spring noted that the line of vegetation ceased at the city limits. Today he saw miles through green fields, fertile lands and prosperous farmers are harvesting bountiful crops. Everybody has known that the land in that county is wonderfully productive when the right kind of water is applied to it, but the results obtained by the development of the irrigation projects immediately south of this city are surprising even to the initiate. Lands which formerly were used only for grazing are now under intensive cultivation and yielding good crops.

The eastern part of the county another great change has been wrought. It is not long since dry land could be used only for grazing, but the development of the dry farming method has made a vast difference. Dry farming involves the application of brains and hard work, but it yields good returns. It is the only salvation of countless millions of acres in the west, from Canada to New Mexico, which never can be made productive by any other method of cultivation, because there is no water available for irrigation. Dry farming has already added an immense sum to the wealth of the arid West, and as its methods and uses are better understood it will contribute many times more.

El Paso County is twice as large as the state of Rhode Island. In time it will support a population equal to that of the smallest state, and this development will come about largely through agriculture.

CHANGING STREET NAMES.

To the Editor of The Gazette.

I have just heard that there is a movement on foot to have the name of San Rafael street changed to College street. So far as I know none of the college authorities has been consulted concerning the proposed change and those with whom I have spoken of it share my strong feeling of disapproval of such a proposition.

The streets in few cities are so well named as ours are. The argument that they are difficult to pronounce is effectively answered by the fact that they are correctly pronounced by our residents and their proper pronunciation is learned in a few minutes by new comers. Let us alter in our city only what is lacking in beauty and significance. The names of our streets have both of these qualities to a marked degree, so rather let us hold fast to what we have that is good than to start a movement of change which may lead us we know not where. While I cannot speak for all the trustees and faculty, as I have not had time to consult them, I feel confident that I am expressing their unanimous opinion as well as my own concerning this matter.

WILLIAM F. SLOCUM.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

In justice to the people who signed the petition for changing the name of San Rafael to College street, or College Road, let it be known that every one whose name appears there is not merely a resident, but a property owner unless the property has changed hands since the petition was signed. Several also own more than one hundred feet.

If Mr. Kissell was not given an opportunity to sign, that was an unfortunate omission.

We were informed by the city attorney that a petition signed by a majority of the property owners was necessary, and since there are scarcely more than 50 on this street, they would seem to be pretty well represented.

In justice to the Council, so far as the writer knows, it is not "tremendously interested" in doing anything to our street, but is willing to do what most of the people directly interested want done, which is perfectly right and regular.

Possibly no one objects to the name as it is, although it is hard to spell and never correctly pronounced, it is the endless confusion with San Miguel, two blocks north, to which they do object, and this is plainly set forth in the petition. Ask the people who wish to stop at San Rafael and are let off at San Miguel to wander around in the dark looking for their destination.

Those interested in the college, and who is not, are glad to have their friends know that they live near it.

CITY PLANNING.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

We have never concerned ourselves very much with the laying out of cities in this country, that is, if we except Philadelphia, whose apologists claim that it is "laid out" better than any other city. "If it is," replied the unappreciative New Yorker, "it is because the other places are not so dead as Philadelphia."

Washington was planned definitely from its inception, and it affords us a continuing example of what may be accomplished by intelligent planning at the beginning for the future needs of a city.

As a rule, however, the young town, like Topsy, "just growed." It is planted somewhere, stretches out as it happens to feel disposed, runs its streets and avenues at right angles, and suddenly is smitten with the consciousness that it has made a lot of foolish blunders and is far from being a credit to itself. Then, quite staggered at the prospect of far-reaching changes and large expense, it makes the biggest blunder of all. It puts a park here and there, erects the inevitable band-stand and a few inconsequential electric fixtures, together with a plaster statue or two, and lapses back into contentment that it has accomplished the beautification of itself.

Colorado Springs has recently awakened to the necessity of taking its future development into its own hands, and not leaving it to be fixed at haphazard. Possessed of great natural beauty and climatic attractions, it is more and more the Mecca of tourists and visitors. Practical necessities, as well as aesthetic ideals must control its growth and expansion.

Conscious of its awakening, and, in a measure, of the vast possibilities that lie before it, it is confronted at the outset with the greatest problem of all—the proper and fitting way of going about the work.

Here is the pitfall. It is possible to duplicate the mistakes of the other communities, and instead of adopting a comprehensive scheme at the outset, to place a disconnected improvement here and there, 'park' a street or two, and so to overlook the really important point, which is the consistent and harmonious development of Colorado Springs as a whole.

Naturally, the first thing that springs into mind, is the expense question. Will not so ambitious a plan mean an increase of the city's debt and of the taxes? This does not necessarily follow, provided the whole matter be handled in a statesmanlike manner. The plans for the improvement should be completed long in advance of the commencement of actual work, while the improvements themselves would be undertaken only as the city found ways and means to undertake them, quite probably distributing them over a long series of years. But by adopting a comprehensive plan at the outset, the piece-meal policy of half-matured schemes and makeshift substitutes will be avoided.

There are very few of us competent to draw up plans for the harmonious development of a city, which shall be at once practical and beautiful. It is no discredit to a lawyer, a real estate dealer or a tradesman that he is not a municipal architect. We can, however, learn something about the theory of municipal development and the consequences of making more than one bite of the architectural cherry of comprehensive city planning.

Under the auspices of the Civic league a lecture, free to the public, has been arranged for Monday evening, October 3, at Perkins hall. Mr. N. Van den Arend, the well-known architect of this city, will deliver a stereopticon lecture on the "Art of City Planning," showing some interesting slides of cities ancient and modern, where the art has been brought to perfection, explaining the reasons governing the proper building and beautifying of a city, and the mistakes that should be avoided.

Mr. Van den Arend's extensive experience and thorough mastery of the art, as well as his acquaintance with the practical side of it, insures a pleasant and profitable evening to those who attend the lecture.

HEAVY BAIL FOR AUTOMOBILE HOMICIDES

From the Chicago Tribune.

In New York they still manage some things better than we do here. The owner and chauffeur of an automobile running at a reckless speed, which collided with a vehicle and killed one of its women occupants, have been held in $25,000 bail and roundly denounced by the coroner for their heartless act in running away and denying their responsibility. Their identity and that of their machine have been established beyond a doubt, and the bail in which they are held is none too much, considering the homicide in which their reckless speed resulted.

QUICK WORK BY FOREST SERVICE

From the New York American.

An example of the efficiency of the United States forest service is now being furnished to the country at large. The fires that have swept the Black Hills were no sooner put out than an army of foresters and rangers was engaged in perfecting plans to reseed the thousands of burned acres. Arrangements have already been made for the planting of 250,000 pine cones, and at the proper season the seeds from these will be scattered broadcast over the devastated area. These seeds will cost the government close to a quarter of a million dollars, but as the soil in the Dakota hills is mostly loam, new forests will quickly repay the expense of planting.

BASEBALL AND ITS COST.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Complaint is made that Americans spend $20,000,000 a year on baseball. Of course there are other ways in which this sum might be used. It might help to defray the cost of the Panama canal, or it would pay for two battleships. It would buy a huge number of pajamas for the otherwise unclothed heathen, or divided into dimes it might be distributed as far as it would go among our own people. But, dollar for dollar, what will do so much as $20,000,000 worth of baseball every year? In the mere matter of taking men away from business cares as often as it does, it is worth more than that. Why, even the Sox fan thinks it is worth the money he spends.

From the Kansas City Star.

It isn't so very many years since the United States used to feed itself and have a lot to spare for the rest of the world. But population and possibly appetite has been increasing. Nowadays, when the American people get up from the dinner table, there are precious few fragments left for anybody else. For instance:

Last week the United States and Canada together exported 1,750,000 bushels of wheat, which was only one-tenth of the wheat exports of the world. In the '90s they were exporting one-half of the total.

Unless scientific farming spreads, so that the yield on each acre is increased to somewhere near what it should be, the time isn't far distant when Uncle Sam won't have enough bread on his plate to pass around to all the members of his family, to say nothing of sending any to the neighbors.

There lives a mighty giant within his noisome hall, and he is strong and pliant, and he is broad and tall; as dreadful as a dragon, he gurgles and he groans, and lifts his brimming flagon, there in his Hall of Bones. Alas, the floor is laden, with skeletons, all bare, and knight and winsome maiden, and sage were murdered there. The floor is always slipping, with heart-blood, through the years; and from the roof is dripping a rain of bitter tears, no cheerful sound is wanted within that giant's den, and all the rooms are haunted by ghosts of tortured men. Among the dead are lying, some sleeping, some awake, poor creatures who are dying in chains they cannot break. And some misguided mortals outside have raised a din; they clamor at the portals. "Good giant, let us in!" And through the entrance alley, and to the place of groans, with grin and smirk and sally, he leads them, 'mid the bones. There are, alas, forever, new faces at his door; they come to him and never shall leave his clutches more. And vultures wave their pinions above the bodies torn, throughout the dark dominions of old John Barleycorn.

The Daily Chit-Chat

"Statistics tell us that the average college woman receives from five to seven hundred dollars a year for her work, usually teaching. It is not surprising then, that numbers of women are eschewing this overcrowded profession and are asking themselves what occupation will give them an adequate return for their educational investment," says Maude Radford Warren in a recent magazine article.

College girls certainly are at last beginning to make this move, and not only college girls, but girls and women everywhere.

And I'm right glad to see it, and I enjoy giving what little impetus I can to the move by occasionally filling this column with notes on unusual methods by which women are making a livelihood.

Only I want help.

I want my readers to make me a bureau through which to tell each other any new ways of solving the bread-and-butter problem, which they have found, or heard of. If you know of any such solution, won't you please consider it your duty to write me about it. Just a few words. But Do It now."

In answer to a previous appeal one woman writes: "Your readers may be interested in an experience of mine. Several summers ago I was obliged to go to the mountains for my health, and I did not have the means. I am a horse woman and love children. I correspond with a summer resort and made arrangements to run a riding school for children. Mothers, I found, are more ready to trust their children to a woman than to a man, and my work was pleasant, beneficial, and most profitable.

"There is an opening, I should think, in almost any city for a permanent thing of this sort. With three or four safe ponies or horses one can make a good profit in teaching and escorting riding parties of children.

"A college girl who prefers a free out-of-door life on her father's farm with her family and friends to teaching or office work in a city, is making a very good living by raising Japanese spaniels. The puppies sell for fifty dollars apiece. She invested a hundred dollars in a pair of dogs, cleared three hundred dollars the first year, double the second, and still more the third.

"Landscape gardening is a profession which is quite a few women are making good at. Blazing the path for their sisters. One woman who started to wind up her brother's business at his death became so interested in it that she continued it instead of winding it up, and now says if she had half a dozen daughters she would advise them all to take up landscape gardening if they had any taste in that line.

"To adopt such a profession one would need of course to have an artistic sense, an eye for proportion and color and good business ability. The rewards vary largely. If a woman makes twenty five hundred dollars a year in landscape gardening she may count herself lucky, although several women have made small fortunes and great names at the work.

Suggestive Questions on the Sundry School Lesson

By Rev. Dr. Lincoln [illegible] Syndicate.

(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D. D.)

Temperance Lesson. Gal. v:15-26.

Golden Text—If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. Gal. v.25.

Verse 15—What should be our attitude toward each other?

Why is it that, even among professed Christians, there is so much evil speaking of those who are absent?

What rule should govern our conversation about our fellows?

Why is it not legitimate to discuss an evil report about the absent, even if we have reason to believe it is true?

Verse 16-17—What does it imply to "walk in the Spirit?"

Do the natural and legitimate appetites and desires of the body, necessarily war against the Spirit of God, or is the reference here to the flesh or sinful mind?

Does God expect every man through the power of the Spirit to succeed in resisting every sinful temptation, or is that the ideal only?

Verse 18—To what extent may we take the Spirit to direct us, as to what we should and should not do?

Verses 19-21—How many of the sins of this catalogue are sins of the body, and how many the sins of the soul?

How many of these sins are impossible of commission if we had no physical nature?

If the use of the appetite and passions of the body and the desires of the heart and mind are fully under the control of the Spirit, how many of these sins would be possible of commission?

Is drunkenness, for example a sin of the body or the soul, or both?

When a drunkard is liberated from the body does he still have a craving for drink?

What is the best cure for drunkenness?

How long would a drunkard crave strong drink if he could not procure any?

Why is it impossible for those who are controlled by the flesh to inherit the kingdom of God?

Verses 22-24—How many, or how much, of these fruits of the Spirit rig is on the day we first commit ourselves to be led of the Spirit?

A flower garden needs at least two things, viz., to be free of weeds and for the flowers to grow, the one being sudden and the other gradual, does this fairly represent the needs of a soul, and if so, specify the process?

Verse 25—Do those who receive the Spirit have to learn to walk in Him, and if so, how is it done? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

Verse 26—If a Christian, out of love, is engaged in good work, is it right or wrong for him to desire to know that his work is appreciated?

If one Christian worker is jealous of another worker, how would you characterize such a person?

SCRIPTURE

PSALMS 23

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures. He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his namesake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies. Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

VICTIMS OF THE TIPPING HABIT

From the Baltimore American.

If what a New York religious weekly alleges concerning the organized and systematized methods of extorting tips and managing the tip funds at New York hotels is only approximately correct, and if tipping conditions on Manhattan Island are spreading the country over, then, indeed, has the time arrived when state legislatures should do something to protect the traveling public and that part of the fixed community which lives at the hotels or restaurants.

According to a statement made in the Christian Herald, the leading hotels—the lessees and proprietors of these caravansaries profit from the tips. That is, they farm out places in the service where the tip receipts are large and under control of the individual purchasing the privilege. It is alleged that "coatroom privileges in the larger hotels sell for from $500 to $10,000 a year, and that one hotel is reported to have received as high as $30,000 for its combined privileges let to tip collectors. Notwithstanding these high prices paid, the men owning the tip stands gather in more than $100,000 a year from the generous guests. The tip privileges for vehicles at the front and side doors of hotels sell at from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. The doorman has a day and night watch and reaps a rich harvest from both. The doorman gets from 25 cents to $1 from each of his wealthy visitors. It is said that a man paid $50,000 a year for the tips for checking garments at one hotel alone."

It is easy to comprehend how this tipping scheme operates as a holdup. Even the man of moderate means comes to understand that the tip is expected at every turn at these hotels, and he has not, generally speaking, the moral courage to set his face hard and refuse to tip. And he soon understands another thing, which is that the small tip is generally accepted with such apparent contempt that it is better not to proffer it. If tipping has already come to be such an organized and systematized plan of extortion in this country, it is certainly time the large victimized class should be seeking about for a remedy.

POOR CHILDREN LEARN TO ACT

Little East Side Juveniles Are Educated in Art of Stage Craft

From the New Idea Woman's Magazine.

Down deep on the East Side, New York, there is a little theater that isn't a theater at all. It is an educational playhouse where shine theatrical stars just as bright as the ones along Broadway—the dream of all play people.

These stars during the daytime go to school or work behind typewriting machines, or add up long columns of figures, or watch mangling machines in the laundries all the day long. Only at night do they come out and twinkle merrily to lighten weary hearts.

Until the educational theater was organized, six years ago, the only amusements accessible to the poorest of the East Side were the nickelodeons, the penny arcades, the tenth-class moving picture shows of the Bowery, Houston and Grand streets.

How to get the boys and youths the girls and young working women to sidestep the insidious Bowery show, to have instead an evening of pure clean enjoyment—that was the question.

After many weighty considerations it was at last decided to present a real play by wholly untrained working boys and girls. Then the educational theater was organized.

When a cast is to be selected the dramatic director lets it be known and applicants flock in. Sometimes as many as 500 apply for a place in a play that requires 30 members.

The admission to the performance is 10 cents. This does not begin to defray the expenses, but that's not the idea—it's educational and not commercial. That's the reason it's a playhouse and not a theater.

The boy, or much more the girl, who reaches that well known period in life's journey finds himself or herself richer in experience, and yet, to all intents and purposes, absolutely ignorant of the real seductiveness, the real dangers and pitfalls of the commercial stage.

SALVATION ARMY'S YOUNGEST MEMBER

From the Baltimore Star.

PITTSBURG—Amid the plaudits of an audience that filled the old Third Presbyterian church, the former worshipping place of many distinguished Pittsburgers, Monday, the Salvation Army added another recruit to its ranks.

Sarah Frances Evangeline Dunham the 7-months-old daughter of Brigadier and Mrs. David E. Dunham, was formally enrolled as the youngest member of the army in the world. The following cablegram was sent to General Booth, commander, by the parents.

"Pittsburg enrolled another recruit. We, its parents, give it freely to the army. Most parents hope that their offspring will be the leading man or woman of the land, but ours hope is that our child will emulate your footsteps and be the peer of charitable work of the world."

LIKENESS IN WOOD OF DANIEL WEBSTER

From the Boston Globe.

Visitors to the historically interesting town of old Hingham are frequently attracted by a statue of Daniel Webster in wood, which has stood within the precincts of a private estate near the railway station, for at least a generation of years. This carved effigy of the great expounder of the constitution was never designed for the ornamentation of the grounds of a mansion house, as now seems to be its fate. It was intended for a figurehead for some ship. Possibly the Boston clipper of fifty years ago, sailing between this port and Liverpool as a passenger craft, which was named as the Daniel Webster, and whose bones now rest in far away waters, was the vessel for whose prow this figure was intended.

"Can be depended upon" is an expression we all like to hear, and when it is used in connection with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy it means that it never fails to cure diarrhoea, dysentery or bowel complaints. It is pleasant to take and [illegible] children and [illegible] all dealers.

You will be pleased with the new Persian plaque pendants we are showing in our north window.

These are made in the very fashionable plaque designs which sprang into immediate favor in Paris this spring.

The colorings are made to correspond with those of the Persian silks now used so extensively. The effect is both novel and beautiful.

A number of the plaques are made in the oxydized platinum and sapphire effects and are decidedly stunning with blue costumes and, as this is to be a blue year, you will get a lot of good out of one of these.

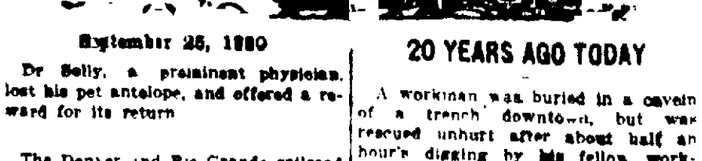

One of the most attractive things about them is the price. The style is the smartest and newest thing offered and the prices are just about one-fourth of what you would expect them to be.

You might as well be the first to wear one of the new styles and thus get an entire season's good out of it.

Between thorough good taste and the reverse may be seen in the selection of wedding gifts. For example, have you not yourself often noticed how some wedding gifts seemed thoroughly useful and appropriate, and how others were utterly out of place. You run no such risk if your wedding gift comes from this store.

The Law of Loyalty

By ELBERT HUBBARD

The very first item in the creed of common sense is OBEDIENCE

Perform your work with a whole heart

Revolt may be sometimes necessary, but the man who tries to mix revolt and obedience is doomed to disappoint himself and everybody with whom he has dealings

To flavor work with protest is to fail in the protest and fail in the work

When you revolt, why, revolt—climb, hike, get out, def)—tell everybody and everything to go to hades! That disposes of the case. You thus separate yourself entirely from those you have served—no one misunderstands you—you have declared yourself

The man who quits in disgust when ordered to perform a task which he considers menial or unjust may be a pretty good fellow, but the malcontent who takes your order with a smile and then secretly disobeys is a dangerous proposition

To pretend to obey and yet carry in your heart the spirit of revolt is to do half-hearted, slipshod work.

If revolt and obedience are equally in power, your engine will then stop on the center, and you benefit no one, not even yourself

The spirit of obedience is the controlling impulse that dominates the receptive mind and the hospitable heart There are boats that mind the helm and there are boats that do not Those that do not get holes knocked in them sooner or later

To keep off the rocks, obey the rudder

Obedience is not to slavishly obey this man or that, but it is that cheerful mental state which responds to the necessity of the case, and does the thing without any back talk—uttered or unexpressed

Obedience to the institution—loyalty

The man who has not learned to obey has trouble ahead of him every step of the way. The world has it in for him continually, because he has it in for the world

The man who does not know how to receive orders is not fit to issue them to others But the individual who knows how to execute the orders given him is preparing the way to issue orders, and, better still, to have them obeyed

There is known to me a prominent business house that by the very force of its directness and worth has incurred the enmity of many rivals. In fact, there is a very general conspiracy on hand to put the institution down and out.

In talking with a young man employed by this house he yawned and said "Oh, in this quarrel I am neutral"

"But you get your bread and butter from this firm, and in a matter where the very life of the institution is concerned I do not see how you can be a neutral" And he changed the subject.

I think that if I enlisted in the Japanese army I would not be a neutral

Business is a fight—a continual struggle just as life is. Man has reached his present degree of development through struggle.

Struggle there must be and always will be

The struggle began as purely physical. As man evolved it shifted ground to the mental, psychic and the spiritual, with a few dashes of caveman proclivities still left.

But depend upon it, the struggle will always be—life is activity. And when it gets to be a struggle in well-doing, it will still be a struggle. When inertia gets the better of you it is time to telephone the undertaker.

The only real neutral in this game of life is a dead one.

Eternal vigilance is not only the price of liberty, but of every other good thing

A business that is not safeguarded on every side by active, alert, attentive, vigilant men is gone. As oxygen is the disintegrating principle of life, working night and day to dissolve, separate, pull apart and dissipate, so there is something in business that continually tends to scatter, destroy and shift possession from this man to that A million mice nibble eternally at every business venture

The mice are not neutrals, and if enough employes in a business house are neutrals, the whole concern will eventually come tumbling about their ears

I like that order of Field Marshal Oyama: "Give every honorable neutral that you find in our lines the honorable jiu-jitsu hikerino."

The Sufferers

By BERTON BRALEY

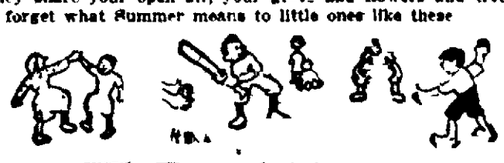

Be happy with your motor boats and autos and canoes,
For these be pleasant days, indeed, to tour about or cruise,
Seek out the mountain places, where the air is cool and pure,
Or hurry to the seashore, where the crashing breakers lure
Oh, find your lazy comfort in whatever place you please,
But don't forget what Summers means to little ones like these.

The dark and reeking tenements the baking, blazing street,
The cruel sun that's overhead, the hot stones under feet,
The panting days, the sleepless nights when babies gasp for breath,
And stalking through the swarming poor there comes the figure Death,
The fetid reek of humid air, the rare and languid breeze
Such is the life that Summer means to little ones like these

They're robbed of childhood's heritage, of flowers and of grass
For parks are far and fare is high, and so the long days pass
With weary "little mothers" and with babes that pant and cry
While the sun comes beating downward from the hot and cruel sky;
So hike for open country and the "fresh and foaming seas,"
But don't forget what Summer means to little ones like these

Yes, take your need of pleasure, there is none to say you nay,
But why not help the little ones get their need of play
To put some color in their cheeks that now are wan and pale
To fill the hollows in their forms that now are thin and frail,
Cannot they share your open air, your grass and flowers and trees?
Ah, don't forget what Summer means to little ones like these

Fog Horn Tales

Capt. Pinochle Tells How Neptune Lights the Ocean.

By HANK.

The blast of the fog horn died away as Captain Pinochle released the rope in the lighthouse, and the pilot settled back in his chair, musing as the smoke wreathed upward from his short black pipe

"Did you notice the phosphorus in the ocean tonight?" he asked Captain Pinochle and without waiting for a reply continued, "It's beautiful If there were such things as mermaids I could imagine that the phosphorescence in the water was simply a reflection from their shimmering robes, spangled with salt crystals or perhaps the glint from their golden crowns

I dipped a handful of water from the side of the rowboat as I came in and the phosphorus glistened like so many diamonds It was very pretty. I almost wished that I could be a merman to dive among it and cover myself with the beautiful, glittering'

"Effery now und den he would make dem eels wiggle mit a stick."

"Haf you been drinking again?" asked Captain Pinochle severely, interrupting the pilot abruptly.

"No," answered the latter "I was having some beautiful thoughts and you butt in and spoil it all. You make me tired."

"I 'butted in,' as you say," said the captain, "not because I vished to disturb your thoughts, but because you vass talking mit someting dot you knows noddings about I am der only von who knows vy der phosphorus is in der ocean."

He Was a "Differ."

"Well, tell me about it," said the pilot, sighing 'but don't make it too big a fairy tale, because I have beautiful ideas about that particular thing, and I wouldn't want them jarred."

'I haf no desire to jar mit anyting," said the captain, 'und I do nod tell vot you call der fairy tales. Only I vill tell you der truth about der phosphorus in der ocean.

"Vunce ven I vass a differ'

"A differ"' repeated the pilot. Do you mean a diver?"

"Dot is vat I said, a differ' replied Captain Pinochle, "I vent down off der Canary Islands vere der canaries come from I vass looking for der anchor of der schooner Gretchen vich I commanded, und dere vass no vun on boardt who vould go down but me

"Vell, I vent down, und down, und it vass all dark Dot vass about seffen o'clock, und der sun vass sinking in der vest Vell, I grabbed aroundt for der anchor und found it, und I vass joost aboud to signal for to be pulled up ven der whole underneath part of der ocean became bright mit beautiful fight

"Preddy soon I saw der mermaids for dot is vat dey vere, swimming aroundt, und der old man, who must haf been Fader Neptune, giffing them orders But still I couldt nod make our vere der light came from.

The Mystery Solved.

'Vell, I kept on looking and looking und preddy soon vofer in a corner I saw a lot of tings dot lokoed like snakes I took anoder look und den I saw dot dey vere all electric eels. You haff heard of dem?"

"Yes, yes, go on," said the pilot

"Der eels vass tied togeddor mit seaweed so dey vould not get avay und offer dem stood a merman mit a stick He vass der electrical engineer Effery now und den he vould touch dem up mit a stick to make dem wiggle und der light in der vater would grow brighter

"While you have been talking," said the pilot as Captain Pinochle finished I have composed a beautiful poem on the mermaids and the phosphorus Listen

'When phosphorus glistens the water blue
With sparkling gems of a silver hue
'Tis then that I know some mermaid fair
Is combing her shimmering golden hair
Her eyes form the drops that flash like the dew
The dream of'

DENVER TO REPEAT CARNIVAL SCENES

Electric Show Will Draw as Large Crowds to Denver as the Old Mountain and Plain Festivals—An Unprecedented, Glittering Spectacle

The old carnival days in Denver will be repeated during the electric show which begins at the auditorium on October 8 It is the first of its kind ever given in the west, and—as anything electrical has a curious interest for the public, many people will flock to Denver to see the glow of a hundred thousand lamps

Work on the great archways of light that will cover Curtis and Champa streets from Eighteenth to the entrance of the auditorium has already begun and indicates the grandeur of the street illumination planned Those familiar with New York during the Hudson-Fulton celebration last fall say that our street illumination during the electric show will eclipse it. The merchants have consented to co-operate with the Electric club in lighting up Denver in a way that has never been attempted anywhere, and night will be turned into day during the entire week of the show

The sunrise picture to be shown at the Auditorium is practically completed, and promises the biggest sensation in lighting ever witnessed. The sun will be seen flaming into view and scattering its morning beams over the snow-capped peaks The mountain stream is given faithful reproduction by lamps flashing on and off This feature alone will be well worth seeing

The great Innes with his band of 45 pieces will delight music lovers with two concerts daily It has cost the Electric club $10 000 to bring this wonderful musical organization west Innes sacrifices a part of his eastern tour in order to come to Colorado

The floor of the Auditorium will have exhibits of every kind of electrical machinery and devices Everything of use of electricity will be illustrated pumping water for irrigation purposes will be a complete working exhibit, and land owners ought to see this demonstration showing how arid land may be reclaimed at a very low cost where underflow can be secured

Many interesting and startling experiments will be demonstrated in the electric vaudeville theater in the basement of the Auditorium W P Carstarphen Jr who has charge of this feature of the show will allow a quarter million volts of electricity to pass through his body It is claimed that 1 000 volts will ordinarily kill a man but Mr Carstarphan says he will take a chance with the big voltage Professor Hazrad and students from the State School of Mines will conduct a series of experiments to illustrate their methods of instruction in electricity

The exhibits from all over the country will be the most valuable collection of electrical novelties and devices ever gathered together All the new experiments in electricity will be seen The various committees are shaping their plans daily at the Albany Hotel the headquarters of the club.

The Albany hotel is only two blocks from the Auditorium where the Electric show will be held Special rates will be made for this week.

The New Pennsylvania Railroad Station in New York city located at Seventh avenue and Thirty-third street from which for the first time recently trains were run through tubes under both the Hudson and East rivers, skirting Long Island and New York and New Jersey for the first time in history in one continuous trip over a single track without the use of ferries The new station puts the Pennsylvania railroad on a par with the New York Central line which for many years has had the right to make the proud boast that it was the only railroad that could bring the traveler into New York from the west without the use of a ferry boat From the new station the run to Long Island is made in three minutes under the river The time under the Hudson from the Jersey side was 3 minutes

LARGEST AEROPLANE IN WORLD BUILT BY BRITISH ARMY MAN

It has been designed and constructed by Lieut Seddon, R. N., at a spot not many miles from Wolverhampton, and is double the size of a Farman biplane. It is called a tandem biplane, and the area covered by the planes is 1,000 feet

The framework is entirely constructed of light steel tubes, which take the place of wire, Lieut. Seddon holding the view that greater stability will result. The tubes are arranged between the upper and lower planes in enormous circular shapes, and although the machine suggests extraordinary heaviness it weighs, in fact, only about a ton.

There are two engines of 30-horse-power each, which actuate two huge propellers of spoon pattern. They eclipse, as far as size is concerned, any other propeller that has yet been devised.

As showing the gigantic area and weight carrying capacity Lieut. Seddon says he can construct a stage to carry six to ten passengers.

Airship the Bait in Smooth Swindle of Gullible Women

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—Aviation has appeared for the first time as the bait of a swindle which worked very well for a time. An advertisement appeared in one of numerous matrimonial organs which flourish in Germany, stating that the inventor of a new and wonderful flying machine, who was without funds, wished to meet a wealthy lady (view to matrimony), so that he might be able to finance his scheme and win numerous prizes with his machine

Answers flocked in, and the "inventor" gathered in a rich harvest of shekels from various confiding and husband-hunting women, whom he gulled with his tales of what marvels he was going to work in the aviation line Of course, there was no aeroplane and no plans, and the ingenious swindler who had promised marriage to dozens of women was prosecuted and sentenced to a severe term of imprisonment.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR BUTT OF CARTOONISTS

BERLIN, Sept 24.—Chancellor Bethman-Vollweg, the kaiser's "right-hand man" is the victim of a persecution by cartoon, and has been so mercilessly roasted by the clever German artists that several newspapers, probably officially inspired, have taken up his defense. They point out that these cartoons are frequently reproduced in foreign papers, and can hardly tend to raise German statesmanship in the estimation of other nations "It is a patriotic duty," say the chancellor's defenders, "for German cartoonists to refrain from caricaturing the chancellor in this brutal manner" In the cartoons, the chancellor was represented as a lazy, inert, philosopher, bored with life and incapable of any decisive action. The implication, of course, was that he is unfit to be intrusted with the administration of the empire.

WILHELM ABJURES ALCOHOLIC DRINKS

BERLIN, Sept 24.—During the grand army maneuvers which began recently in East Prussia, the emperor ordered that only non-alcoholic beverages be served to him, as he has found from experience that they enable him better to withstand the strain of spending the greater part of the day in the saddle. He also called upon the troops to cut down their indulgence in spirituous liquors to the lowest possible point. This exhortation is all the more in place since statistics show that, in consequence of the rising consumption of alcohol in the army, the number of soldiers whom it has been necessary to discharge for heart affections has increased tenfold

Wings Next
By Garrett P. Serviss

The aeroplanist, who excites so much admiration and wonder in the world today, is only a boy sliding down hill.

Science has discovered for him the fact that a plane surface driven through the air at a predetermined slope has the property of gliding ahead without falling. The atmospheric slope thus artificially created takes the place of the well-smoothed snow on which the boy's sled glides, and the force of the motor-driven screws pressing the aeroplane against the air acts the part of gravitation in pulling the boy down to the bottom of the hill.

As far as actual control is concerned, the conductor of the aeroplane has no advantage over the boy guiding his sled with his heels; neither the one nor the other can go if he gets off his slope.

But it will not always be so. The next step in advance will put the aeroplane upon the level of the wheeled vehicle which can go and turn as its driver pleases, and which is often impeded as aided by slopes

This advance will come through a profound study of the living creatures to whom nature has accorded the power of flight—birds and insects. Of course, on account of his weight and of the still greater weight of his burdens, man can never succeed in flying without the aid of a motor power incomparably greater than that furnished by his muscles; but this, fortunately he already possesses. It only remains to discover the proper form of apparatus to enable a machine actually to fly as a bird flies.

Human aerial navigation in the future—and it may be the near future—will primarily depend, not upon aeroplanes, but upon something functionally resembling wings. The aeroplanes of the present day resemble wings in only one of their applications, and that not the most important If birds could do no more than soar they would not be superior as air navigators to Curtiss, or Wright, or Paulhan. But the mechanism which birds (and insects, also) possess has far greater uses.

A most significant and enheartening fact has recently been pointed out by those who are studying the fundamental problems of this subject, viz. that the perfected flying animals of today have been developed from three forms of the geological yesterday. These are: First, arboreal animals whose earliest efforts at flight probably resembled those of flying squirrels second swimming animals (among which are flying fish), and, third, running and leaping animals, which gradually acquired the ability to maintain themselves in the air

Thus nature has pointed out the way some of her humbler creatures have followed it and it remains for man guided by his intelligence and encouraged by the examples before him to complete the real conquest of the kingdom of the air

An Awkward Predicament
By Winifred Black.

Winifred Black.

My wife is intensely religious. I am not irreligious, but subscribe to no particular creed. This difference has never during a long period of married life caused any disturbance in our relations to each other.

But now there has arisen a contention between us about a matter to which my wife attaches great importance, so much that she constantly returns to the subject, which I would gladly dismiss.

Some weeks ago my wife was shopping, accompanied by our young daughter and a lady friend, whose relations with my wife have been quite intimate. At one of the stores my wife was horrified to detect this friend in the act of pilfering. Our daughter also noted it and became so scared that she attracted attention to herself.

Several days after the occurrence my wife, whose distress in the meantime had been so evident that I questioned her, related the facts in detail, and asked my advice. She blames herself as an accessory because she did not reveal the thefts at once to the authorities at the store, and finds herself now in an awkward position. She cannot "cut" her relations with the woman without making an explanation, and she feels she is debasing herself by pretending a cordiality that is entirely lacking. Her conscience also worries her.

She says she must confess, but I forbid her to ever mention the affair to any one as long as she lives, pointing out the probability of a suit for defamation of character as a direct result.

What course should she pursue? She has often remarked on your sympathetic heart and good judgment, and I think if you tell her in your own way to "forget it," she might heed.
R. S. V. P.

How is that for an awkward predicament?

I am glad I am not in it, aren't you?

But if I was in it, I'd get out, and I'd get out just as quickly as I possibly could

How would I do it? Why, the simplest way in the world.

I wouldn't go to the proprietor of the shop and tell the distressing truth.

I wouldn't tell any one on earth—unless it was the other woman's husband except the other woman.

And I would tell her, and tell her the very first minute I could catch her alone, and I would make it my business to see that that first minute came mighty soon.

There is just one way to keep thieves from stealing, and that is to let them know that people know they steal.

Go to your foolish friend, my dear conscientious little woman, and say to her, "Honey, I saw you take those things the other day at the shop. I love you and I am willing to forget all about it for this time, but there must never be another time, or you and I can never be friends again I don't know what made you do it. Perhaps you were ill, or in some dreadful trouble and didn't realize your own responsibilities. But I saw you, and if you do it again somebody else will see you, and there is nothing ahead of you down that road but shame and sorrow and humiliation.

"Come, walk with me down the straight path. We'll walk together honestly and fearlessly, and I will be your faithful friend."

That's the only kind, the only honest, the only sensible, the only courageous, the only true thing for you to do.

Do it, and then forget the whole business

A Parisian picture of Madame Lina Cavalieri-Chanler that has never before been printed in the United States. This is one of the pictures that is said to have influenced Chanler in deciding to move heaven and earth to win the famous beauty. The diva, according to latest reports, has had herself photographed in a score of "grief poses," showing her sad expression since the worry of the money trouble and scandal connected with her husband has arisen. The lawyers on both sides that are warming up for the preliminary skirmish still differ as to the legality of the ante-nuptial document signed by Chanler.

Some Causes of Divorce

By DOROTHY DIX.

The second thing that leads to divorce is that almost every marriage is founded on deceit and misapprehension.

Courtship is a confidence game in which both youths and maidens endeavor to take each other in, and if the music of the wedding bells could be translated into prose they would cry out: Stung! Stung! Stung!

It is true that, except in rare cases, a man does not engage in a deep, dark, nefarious plot in order to lure a woman to the altar, nor are there many women cold and crafty enough to deliberately ensnare men into marrying them. Nevertheless, the man in love and the woman in love unconsciously act a part before the one he or she is trying to win, and are no more like that real pe[rson] than a dog rose is like an American Beauty, or a cold boiled potato resembles the pommes de terre au gratin of the fashionable restaurant.

Nor is the deceitfulness of mankind and womankind altogether responsible for this. Dame Nature, who, as we have shown, is the great matchmaker, inspires us in the courting season to put the best foot foremost. The same instinct that puts, in spring, the livelier iris on the burnished dove, and that makes the peacock strut and pose before his mate, makes a young man put on his best clothes when he goes a-courting, and makes a girl Marcel her hair to the roots when her best young man is a-coming.

It is what causes plain, prosaic John Jackson to pretend that he adores German opera and understands Browning because Gladys Gwendolyn Smith affects these things, when his real taste is musical comedy and George Ade. It is what leads Angelina Jones to sit up with a rapt expression at the baseball game to which Bill Jenkins has dragged her, although she is enduring a martyrdom of boredom and wondering why her escort yells himself black in the face over what some crazy looking men are doing to a measly ball.

No man who was trying to win a girl would dream of such a thing as showing himself to her with a three-days' stubble of beard on his face. Nor would he let her see that he was by nature overbearing, and tyrannical and stingy, and selfish. On the contrary, he is chivalrous, and tender, and self-abnegating and lavish towards her. He anticipates her every wish and has no thought except to please her, and she naturally argues from this that when she marries him she will get the one perfect husband in the world.

Before Marriage the Man and the Girl Show Only the Best Sides of Their Nature to the Other.

In the same way a woman deceives a man. You don't catch her appearing before him in curl papers and a Mother Hubbard wrapper. You never hear of any girl who feels called upon to tell the man she is in love with that she is utterly useless and no account, that she doesn't know how to cook an egg, or make her own clothes, and that she hates the sight of a cooking stove, and has the incurable bargain sale habit, and that if he marries her he will have to board in a hotel and hustle early and late to make enough money to pay her bills.

She's Mild and Angelic.

Nor does she warn him that she is selfish and high tempered and has nerves, and that all of her family are afraid of her—Far from it—in his presence she is so mild and gentle that butter wouldn't melt in her mouth, and she purrs so under his hand when he plans their little home that it is no wonder that he believes that he is getting a household angel.

Is it any wonder when these two people get married, and drop the lovely masques that they have been holding up in front of their faces, and see each other as they really are, that there should be trouble? I once heard a women say that she felt as if she were a bigamist, because the man she was married to was so different from the man that she thought she was marrying. Without doubt, the majority of marriages might be annulled on the ground that a different bride or bridegroom was substituted at the altar for the one that the man or woman thought he or she was marrying.

If marriage is a failure because men and women deceive each other as to what they really are, it is also a failure because men and women do not deal honestly with each other in regard to the conditions of matrimony. It is as you may say, a skin game in which neither the principals nor the prospectus is on the level.

A Hand-Painted Dream.

When a man is courting a girl, in speaking of their future life he deals in glittering generalities. He may tell her that he is poor and that they will have to live in a vine-wreathed cottage, and the girl translates this to mean about a $75-a-month suburban home, full of white enameled furniture and rose-strewn chintz, the real imported English kind you know.

He doesn't come down to brass tacks as he should, and say: "Look here, Maude, if you marry me you will have to live in a four-roomed flat in Harlem, and do your own cooking, and make your own hats and dresses, and scrap with the butcher, and pinch and pinch and scrinch, and have no amusement except my society and a walk in the park on Sundays. Now, do you think you love me enough to pass up everything else for the joy of being at my side?"

Nor does a girl give a man a chance to withdraw on the safe side of the altar by telling him that she is one of the light-minded, frivolous sort of women that has got to have fine clothes no matter if she works her husband to death or drives him to stealing to get them, and that she is a charter member of the race suicide club, and that she means to devote her life to bridge instead of babies.

When the Showdown Comes.

Is it any wonder that, when a man marries the woman who has led him to believe that she is one thing, and finds out that she is another, he falls out of love with her? Is it any marvel that, when the woman who thought she was marrying a man who was a perfect lover discovered that she is united to a grinding tyrant, she ceases to care for him? Is it surprising that matrimony that must be lived under conditions that they never bargain for is full of disillusions to both men and women?

Nor need any one throw up his hands in horror when such people complain to the divorce court. The wonder is that all of the flim-flam couples do not squeal, and that so many duped, deceived men and women are dead game sports, who stand by their sorry bargains to the end.

One of the great remedies for the divorce evil would be for men and women, who are thinking of getting married, to try to deal honestly by each other, and by themselves, in the days of courtship.

WHITE PLAGUE IS BAFFLED

Great Stride Made in Fight Against Tuberculosis.

After exhaustive tests quietly conducted for over two years in California and Arizona, the announcement is authorized that an absolute specific has at last been found for tuberculosis. The new remedy, discovered by Dr. Charles F. Aycock, is given in the form of an almost tasteless liquid which accomplishes what has hitherto baffled medical science, namely, the destruction of the tubercle bacilli through the circulatory system without the slightest injury to the bodily tissues. The specific is taken with ordinary food at home.

The large number of cures effected by the new specific includes many cases pronounced by pulmonary specialists to be hopelessly incurable.

Owing to its remarkable success, the new remedy called "Tubercleicide" is being rapidly introduced throughout the country. Sufferers in Colorado can secure conclusive proofs of what it has accomplished and learn how the new remedy may be obtained by communicating in person or by letter with the Tubercleicide Company, 519 McPhee Building, Denver, Colo.

LIKES AND DISLIKES

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.)

A woman was boasting in my presence of her "strong likes and dislikes." I wonder how many thousand persons I have heard use that same expression. It is such a platitude.

"I love and hate with equal intensity," she said.

"If you love in real fulness of heart," I ventured, "you will find no room for hate. Love is like the sunlight, and drives out the darkness of hate."

"Oh, but I never forget an injury," the woman explained. "If you did me a wrong, I would get even with you if it wasn't for 10 years. It is my nature."

"A poor use of good memory," I replied. "I would rather forget my alphabet. Revengeful thoughts carry bad luck on their wings. You are cultivating misfortune."

"But you can't change nature," insisted the woman. "I am like my mother. She never forgot an injury."

"Then I would emulate my father," quoth I, "and forget them."

"But you can't change nature," repeated the woman. "You have to be as you are made."

What nonsense! It is the cry of the spiritually indolent, the excuse of the mental sluggard. But it has no foundation of truth.

Look at Dame Nature's face. How man changes its expression and form. Out of miasmic marshes he creates fertile valleys and blooming gardens. Rocky and unsightly hills are transformed into artistic sites for splendid cities. Tangled forests are turned into beautiful parks, and the courses of great rivers are changed for the purposes of commerce.

Human nature is just as susceptible to improvement, if we are willing to go about the task with the same determined will.

Weeds Versus Flowers.

Over and over, the gardener who prepares a piece of stony ground for vegetation or a waste place for flowers is obliged to pluck away rocks and weeds. Over and over he hoes and harrows and fertilizes the soil, until it becomes what he requires. Even after the grain or flowers spring into sight the weeds attempt to choke their progress. But the eye of the gardener is quick to see the mischievous intruders, and his hand and hoe are quick to remove them.

Unlike the gardener, we are prone to call our heart weeds by flowery names and to ignore their viciousness.

This woman of whom I speak believed her revengeful nature to be a virtue. She gloried in it. So many of us call for petty jealousy "an excess of love," our ill tempers "an evidence of spirit," and our envy of another's good fortune "a high sense of justice." And we cultivate and prune these ugly and unsightly weeds, instead of pulling them up by the roots.

We straighten crooked limbs, we correct uneven teeth, we remove blemishes from the cuticle. Why not form the mind and heart as well? Pray for strength and insight; [illegible] on the folly of allowing unworthy qualities to mar your character; sustain your efforts by worthy pride, and [illegible] the divine nature within you to be what you desire.

Do not say we cannot change nature. "We will be what we will be."

Work is progressing rapidly on the Portland (Ore.)-Seattle (Wash.) road, and five miles of macadam roadway has been finished in the vicinity of Castle Rock, Wash.

HIS REASON

I SAW the young man and his blooming bride
Flee from the open doorway where their kin
And friends stood, cheering loudly, a-grin,
And flinging rice and slippers far and wide
With all too true an aim, one slipper shied
Caught the fair bride upon her dimpled chin
Another struck the groom and broke the skin—
Whereat the thrower yelled with glee and pride
Bleeding and bruised, at last they got away,
But there were other troubles yet in store
Their trunks, white satin ribbons did display,
And placards, crudely jocular, they bore,
At which I heard the happy bridegroom say—
Something. It's my impression that he swore.

I love a maiden. I have loved her long—
Devotedly. My passion does not wane:
But as the years roll on it seems to gain.
Now her attraction never was so strong.
I've not proposed. It's likely that I'm wrong.
And yet it costs me not a little pain
And not a little effort to refrain,
A life with her would be one glad, sweet song—
But when I think of those frock-coated fools
And female oafs in idiotic glee,
O'er whom the imp of apish mischief rules,
Their monkey tricks from sense or reason free,
Why, then, I have to own my ardor cools.

—KENNETT HARRIS.

Entertained at Country Club

At the Cheyenne Mountain Country club last Monday evening Judge and Mrs. Kurnal R Babbitt were host and hostess of an elaborate dinner and dance. The guests numbering 50 were entertained as a farewell compliment in recognition of the numerous social functions which have been tendered them while temporarily in the city.

At the base of snowy pillars entwined with smilax were clusters of the handsome Twentieth century dahlias shading from pink to ruby red, and strands of smilax entered into the decorative scheme on the tables. The cloth was artistically strewn with gorgeously tinted wood leaves and the effect was a beautiful one. Following the serving of the dinner came dancing to music furnished by Fink's orchestra of five pieces.

Mrs. Katherine Tanner Fisk, who has been a resident of Colorado Springs for several months is now revisiting her former home in Rockford, Ill. The Rockford Register-Gazette, Saturday, September 17, contains the following which will be of interest to Mrs Fisk's numerous friends residing in this city

"Sixty friends of the Misses Lena and Franc Todd and of their guest, Mrs. Katherine Tanner Fisk, were delightfully entertained at the Todd home on Seminary street Friday afternoon, the guests having the double pleasure of renewing their acquaintance with the artist and of hearing her sing. The beauty of Mrs Fisk's glorious contralto and her rare charm of personality, combined with a regal presence have been the heaven bestowed endowments of which Mrs. Fisk has made the most, and the result has been an eminently successful musical career. But although she has mingled with the great artists of the world, and received the plaudits of the public at home and abroad, she has lost none of the sweet womanliness and graciousness of character which has endeared her to her friends, and her cordial greeting of them yesterday evidenced the fact that the pleasure of the meeting was mutual

"Although Mrs Fisk was forced to abandon her musical work a year ago on account of ill health, she was generous to her friends yesterday giving them besides the program of nine numbers several old favorites which they requested including 'L'Eschare' by Lulu Bendemeer's Stream' and 'The Rosary'

"The music lovers of Rockford will be happy to know that Mrs Katherine Tanner Fisk one of Rockford's daughters who for years has been known to the world as a dramatic contralto second to none of America's many beautiful singers will give a recital in the chapel of Rockford college next Thursday evening at 8 o'clock

"The program will be announced later but it will please many to know that Mrs. Fisk's closing number will be Homberg's Ballade du desespere This composition is for a reader and vocalist accompanied by piano, violin and cello Mrs Fisk will take both the part of reader and singer

"The announcement that Mrs. Fisk will sing at the morning service at the First Congregational church Sunday morning will be received with delight by her friends. But the Lord is Mindful of His Own' from Mendelssohn's Oratorio of St Paul is the number chosen for the service Sunday

"Mrs Fisk has decided to abandon the strenuous life of a professional and give her friends the benefit of her beautiful voice in private recitals and for charity. She expects to spend the winter in southern California."

Family Photographs

The importance of possessing frequent family photographs can hardly be overestimated. It is growing in appreciation every year, although still frequently overlooked until too late.

We devote special attention to the portraiture of children, and recommend their being brought to the studio at least twice a year during their early childhood. The charm of a successful child portrait is ever present, and it becomes more precious with every passing year. Come in and let us talk it over.

Little Home Helps on How to Be Beautiful

By MADAM MAREE.

MAKING A MASSAGE CREAM.

A reader writes from Portland, Oregon: "The cerol massage cream you recommended to Myrtle K. is the daintiest I ever used." I am exceedingly careful in advising my readers and it is a pleasure to learn that these simple home remedies are helpful. While most massage creams are costly and hard to make, readers of this column will find the cerol preparation inexpensive and equal to the finest on the market. To make it get three ounces of cerol crystals from your druggist and put into a pint of water that has been brought to the boiling point, stir until dissolved and pour into a pint jar. This cerol cream is not greasy and will not grow hair while it feds the delicate shrunken tissues, removes wrinkles and blemishes, frees the pores from blackheads and gives the skin that soft satiny glow of youth.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

Dora: Brushing the scalp vigorously will not cure dandruff nor stop falling hair. You must use a good shampoo every other week for a while and a tonic every day for a month, then once a week. I advise eggol for shampooing, as it removes dandruff and feeds the scalp. For a tonic I would suggest beta-canthol which any druggist can supply. To eight ounces of grain alcohol add the same amount of water and into this put an ounce of beta-canthol. A faithful use of these two will promote a luxuriant growth of hair and keep the scalp clean and healthy.

Miss B.: Nature intended woman should have a plump, well rounded figure, but the method you employ is ineffective, as massaging only clears the skin but does not develop the delicate tissues and muscles. Use the Vaucaire treatment which you can prepare by making a simple syrup with a cup and a half of granulated sugar and enough water to make a pint; into this stir an ounce of true gallol, then take two tablespoonfuls three times a day. This is the best and most effective remedy I know of for scrawniness and underdevelopment.

Mrs. Y.: I wouldn't advise the electric needle as it is too painful and costly. I have suggested the delol treatment to many readers and know you will find it effective, as it actually removes all traces of hair and does not leave any injurious after effects. Get a package of delol from your druggist and with warm water mix into a soft paste enough to thickly cover the spot; let this remain for about two or three minutes, then scrape off and the hair is gone.

Jane: (1) Consult your family physician. (2) Don't despair because of red hands and rough skin. Stop using powder and prepare the following: Get two ounces of amarol from your druggist and dissolve it in a pint of hot water. Use this lotion on the face and hands, and the redness and roughness soon disappear, then you will have a pink and white complexion such as Nature intended.

PENN LOSES TO URSINUS; NEITHER LIKES NEW RULES

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 24. New football had its first test today in the game between Pennsylvania and Ursinus, the latter winning, 8 to 5.

There was no fluke to the victory. Ursinus clearly outplayed Pennsylvania in three of the four periods. Whether it was forward passing, end running or line plunging the visitors were superior to the Pennsylvanians.

In the first quarter Ursinus scored a goal from placement, and in the third made a touchdown after a 40-yard run that was started with a forward pass.

Pennsylvania did not rally until the final period when Ramsdell, the sprinter, entered the game and scored the only touchdown for Pennsylvania.

After the game Dr. Carl Williams, who helped draft the new rules, declared his belief that they imposed too great a burden on the offense, and that two teams, evenly matched and conditioned, would have great difficulty in scoring. He advised that the distance to be gained in three downs be reduced from 10 yards to 5 yards, or that a runner be allowed to receive assistance from at least one of his interference.

The game was surprisingly clean. Only four penalties were inflicted for assisting the runner, three times against Ursinus and once against Pennsylvania. Penn made eight substitutions, two men taking part twice. Ursinus played the entire game woth but 11 men. Only once was time taken out for an injured player.

After the game, both sides criticised the division of the time into four periods, declaring that it slowed up the game, and was not necessary to save the players from exhaustion. The lineup:

TIGER TEAM PUTS IN ANOTHER HARD DAY'S PRACTICE

There was more hard practice at Washburn field yesterday afternoon, and when Coach Rothgeb sent the football squad to the gym the players needed no second invitation. Scrimmage work was eliminated yesterday, as the men are still stiff and sore from the first lineup on Friday. Tomorrow, however, scrimmage practice will again be in order and will probably continue from now on.

Special attention was given to the linemen, and later in the afternoon the first team squad was put through a rapid signal drill. Thompson, Putnam and Sinton were excused from the workout owing to slight injuries.

It was learned yesterday that Daniel Knowlton, Harvard graduate and all-American tackle in 1903 has offered his services as an assistant to Coach Rothgeb. The latter is equally anxious to meet the Crimson star, who will be able to give much valuable instruction, especially to the forwards. The flying tackle was one of the spectacular plays permitted during Knowlton's football days and he is one of the many eastern devotees of the game who regrets that it is placed under the ban by the new rules. "I have never seen a man injured seriously as a result of the flying tackle," he said yesterday, "and do not see how the players will be able to get along without it. There is no question that speed will be an important factor this year."

Third League Still Worries Club Magnates

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Sept. 24.—The possibility of a new league breaking into the field is not the only thing worrying the major league moguls. The activity displayed by Promoter Fletcher of the all-star series is causing them no little annoyance. The following men have declared by letter or telegrams within the past few days that they will report to Fletcher after the world's series and make the trip:

Pitcher Mullin, Catcher Stanage, Shortstop Bush and Outfielders Cobb and Crawford of the Detroit Tigers; Outfielder Tommy Leach and Catcher Gibson of the Pittsburg Pirates, Manager McGraw of the New York Giants, Pitcher Walter Johnson and Outfielder Milan of the Washington Senators, Outfielder Magee of the Philadelphia Nationals, Artie Hofman and Johnny Evers of the Chicago Cubs, Catcher Carrigan and Outfielder Speaker of the Boston Red Sox and Second Baseman Eddie Collins and Pitcher Bender of the Philadelphia Athletics.

A number of the players mentioned have also sent their measurements for uniforms. Fletcher declares that late Thursday evening he received a telegram signed by five members of the Cubs, which read as follows.

"We will be with you as per agreement. (Signed) Hofman, Brown, Evers, Kling, Overall."

Glenn H. Curtiss, the noted aviator, although completely absorbed in his work in which he has become a leader, recently purchased a runabout in Pittsburg.

HIGH SCHOOL FIELD NOW IN SHAPE AND TEAM HARD AT WORK

Football practice improved 50 per cent at the High School yesterday, for when the squad turned out at 3 o'clock it was to find that the field had been scraped and rolled and put into first-class condition.

The improvement was badly needed, and by way of showing their appreciation the two teams went at each other in mid-season form. When the scrimmage work grew too hot, Coach Coffin called a halt and devoted the remainder of the day to working out plays with the forward pass, running back kicks and signal drills.

While school does not open until tomorrow, all of the old players have been out in football togs for the last week, with the exception of Captain Cheese. When he reports for practice tomorrow afternoon he will find that the team is already well under way and getting better every day.

TEAMS GO BACK TO OLD STYLE GAME

BOSTON, Sept. 24.—The trials of an umpire in a minor baseball league are slight compared with the duties of gridiron officials who assumed the direction of the opening college and academy football games played under the new rules on New England fields today.

At several places games were halted after almost every play by disputes over the interpretation of the rules and players were frequently penalized for infractions.

The Massachusetts Agricultural college and Rhode Island state teams practically abandoned any attempt to use the new conditions and resorted to the old-fashioned line bucking and more familiar plays.

No particular feature of the new play was given such a test as to warrant any deduction being made as to the advantages or demerits of the change in conditions.

THE FIRST "VICTIM"

SHERIDAN MAKES A NEW DISCUS RECORD

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—A new world's record for throwing the discus was established today by Martin J. Sheridan at the games of the East End club. Sheridan hurled the discus, weighing 4¼ pounds, 142 feet 7 inches. The old record was 139 feet 10½ inches.

GARDINER BEAT FOWLER

In the finals of the consolation round of the Y. M. C. A. tennis tournament yesterday, Raynor Gardiner defeated Ernest Fowler in straight sets. The score was 6-2, 6-3.

Conference Bars Marquette; Then Adjourns Until Oct. 8

The proposed football game between Denver university and Marquette university, scheduled for Denver, October 15, will not be permitted, in accordance with a decision of the faculty athletic conference, which held a session in Denver yesterday.

This, it is said, was the only matter of importance taken up at the meeting, which lasted for several hours. No action was taken regarding the protested players whose names were sent to the conference by Ernest Fowler, manager of the Colorado College football team.

The players are: Fullback Shroeder, Halfback Walker, of Denver university; Fullback Stocker, Halfback McFadden, University of Colorado. Keim, it is understood, is not in college this year.

When the conference does take up the matter of the protested players, at its next meeting, now set for two weeks hence, it will be charged that Walker did not receive sufficient credits at Denver Manual to permit him to enter Denver university. Shroeder will be protested on the ground that he quit school last spring several weeks before the end of the semester. The university admits that such is the case, but says that he was a victim of appendicitis.

Halfback McFadden of Boulder will be charged with intermittent attendance, while the nature of the inquiry against Fullback Stocker is not known at this time. It is hinted that the eligibility of players from other state institutions was to have been taken up at yesterday's meeting, but, if such was the case, the findings of the conference are not given out.

The next meeting is set for October 8; then the conference will decide, perhaps, what action it will take concerning those whose eligibility is questioned. To those who are unable to grasp the reason for the lack of prompt ruling by the conference committee, it would seem far better and fairer to all concerned if lists of eligible football players were certified at the earliest possible date.

Last year's instance is not forgotten, when two of the star players on the Colorado College team were declared ineligible on the eve of the most important game of the season—that with Boulder. The decision was unlooked for, unexpected, and it threw the college team into a state of helplessness from which no coach or no eleven could have recovered in the time that remained.

If players are to be ruled off this year, in the judgment of the conference committee, it is to be hoped that that body will see the importance, the justice and the necessity of making its rulings without a single day's delay, and giving the coach, the team and the player so affected a square deal. That's all that is asked.

Today Is the Day to Bid the Demon Zooz a Fond Farewell

With the weather man predicting a fair day, the outlook is for one of the biggest crowds of the season at Zoo park this afternoon when the grand finale of the local baseball season will be staged in the shape of a double bill of amateur and semiprofessional ball. Picked teams representing Colorado City and Colorado Springs will present the curtain raiser, with the Zooz and the White City team of Lakeside, Denver, as the central attraction.

After this game the Zooz will disband for the season, several of the players intending to take vacation trips, and a victory this afternoon will bring to a fitting close a remarkable season of winning ball. Out of some two score games played at Zoo park against the best teams that could be secured from the Rocky mountain region, the Zooz have lost only some half a dozen and in every case afterward defeated decisively the same teams that had beaten them. Their record includes a victory over Trinidad in the only game played and Cheyenne is the only team that has an edge on the Zooz, the Indians having taken the series at Cheyenne a few weeks ago after having been beaten by the Zooz here. The great strength of the local bunch has been in the slugging department and the Zooz are conceded by all experts as the hardest hitting team in the state.

This afternoon they will have to have their batting eyes on, as Meyer, the crack twirler of the White City team, is said to be a wonder, but with Hastings in the box and Burt Siddons behind the bat the Zooz expect to bring home the bacon. At first base Reilly, the crack Cripple Creek player who is slated for league company next year, will hold forth and his work promises to be a revelation to the local fans. Jimmy Counts, the premier slugger, at third; Gilstrom at short, McClurg at second, Gall in center and Diamond in left, with either Kelly or Sollenberger in right, will complete a strong lineup.

The White City team will line up as follows: Hays and Meyer, p.; Pettigrew and Jeuck, c.; Puehl, 1b; Anderson, 2b; Bell, 3b; Stannard, ss; Kaler, lf; Hunter, cf; Sherrick, rf.

The opening attraction promises to be a hummer, with the cream of the amateur talent of the Pikes Peak region in the lineup. The local and the Colorado City players have been arguing all summer as to their relative merits and today's game will settle the question of supremacy. Reilly, the big southpaw twirler of the Portland mill team, and Wilson of the Cycles, will be the battery for the Colorado City team with Fuller and Borden doing the heavy work for the locals. The full lineups are as follows:

Springs—Borden, c, South End; Fuller p, South End; Baucroft, Colorado College; Weller, ss; Bruening, 1b, High School; James lf; Fowler, cf; Rodney, f, South End.

The first game will be called promptly at 1:30, and will be for seven innings, while the second contest, a nine-inning affair, will be staged promptly at 3:15. Sam Goshen will officiate in both contests.

JENNINGS IN LINE FOR 1911

DETROIT, Sept. 24.—Hughie Jennings signed a contract to manage the Tigers next year. The red-haired leader is the first member to sign a contract for 1911.

Owner Frank Navin has never had any other idea than making Hughie manager again next year. There were "fake" reports about Hughie quitting and all that sort of thing, but merely started as all rumors start.

Jennings came to the baseball office and found the contract papers ready. The owner asked the manager about the terms.

"Just write in your own terms, Frank," said the manager. "You've always treated me right and I never had any complaint with the way I have been received in Detroit. I'll leave it up to you, knowing that you will do the right thing by me, as you have done in the past."

Navin wrote in the figures and handed the contract to Hughie.

"Fine," exclaimed Jennings, and affixed his signature.

Although the exact figures were not made known, it is said they are the same as those under which Hughie was employed this year.

STOFER, TOPEKA BALL PLAYER, HERO IN ROCK ISLAND WRECK

DENVER, Sept. 24. Survivors of yesterday's wreck on the Rock Island railroad near Clayton, Kan., accord to Edward S. Stofer, third baseman of the Topeka baseball club, the credit of being the hero of the catastrophe. Stofer, who plays baseball in summer and practices medicine in winter, was able to put his surgical knowledge to practical use.

The Topeka team was riding in the first sleeper immediately in the rear of the chair car and experienced the full force of the shock. Jake Beckley, the veteran first baseman, was badly bruised, and two of the other players were so dazed that they were able to give little aid to those seriously hurt.

"I was badly jarred, but I got out of the car," said Beckley today. All the boys jumped right in and began pulling out those who were caught in the wreckage. Dr. Stofer started an improvised hospital and attended them with what means there were at hand. Stofer kept busily at work until the relief train came in near 8 o'clock."

Stofer, who disclaimed any acts of heroism, said:

"I happened to have some bandages with me, as someone is nearly always getting hurt on the team, and I keep some common remedies with me. All the injured were brought in to me and I fixed them up temporarily. Three of them, however, were so badly hurt that I think they died soon afterward."

YALE WON GOLF TITLE IN DARK

MANCHESTER, Mass., Sept. 24.—A missed tee shot after 38 holes of steady and often brilliant playing cost Harvard the individual intercollegiate golf championship today, Robert E. Hunter of Yale, a member of the Midlothian club of Chicago, defeating F. C. Davidson of Harvard in the final round, 1 up in 39 holes.

The victory gives Yale its seventh individual golf championship, while the team honors in the intercollegiate association also go to the New Haven college this year.

Hunter's brilliant work in the early part of the match, which took six hours and 15 minutes to play, and was finished in the dark, had stalled off defeat which seemed inevitable. At the twenty-fifth hole the match looked like a gift to the Harvard player, who was four up at that point. Here the young Chicago golfer spurted brilliantly and squared the match at the thirty-fourth hole, and from thence to the thirty-eighth the holes were halved. Then came Davidson's mishap and Hunter's victory.

WHITE "SKIRT" WON FOR BILLY FOWNES

PITTSBURG, Sept. 24.—A white "skirt" won for W. C. Fownes, Jr., of Pittsburg, the crucial sixteenth hole in the recent match with Charles Evans for the National Golf championship at Brookline. At a reception at the Oakmont country club tonight the champion said:

"After Mr. Evans was two up and three to go, I noticed that he seemed to make his approach putt a little carelessly. He went 14 feet over the hole. Mr. Miston, who was caddying for me, then being called upon for advice, said: 'Bill I can see a white skirt in the crowd. You putt for that.'

"Of course gentlemen, you understand that this was very much easier said than done, but by the grace of Providence, the ball trickled in which left me one down to two to go. The white skirt did not win the match, but it helped."

TENNIS RACING SPORT COMMENT

GIANTS TO HAVE FIFTEEN YOUNGSTERS NEXT SPRING

By SAM CRANE.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—It is always more or less of a gamble as to how young players will turn out, and club owners are willing to take long chances in their efforts to secure "phenoms." Any club that can get one "find" out of a dozen new players, is very fortunate.

The New York club will have fifteen youngsters next spring, who may possibly be the coming Mathewsons, Chases and Cobbs of the future, but then again, none of the entire crowd may turn out to be of any use.

In Louis Drucke, I think the Giants have a pitcher who will eventually be nearly up to Christie Mathewson as a pitcher. He is, in my opinion, a real "find," and will be a very valuable asset to the New York club.

Drucke was secured from the Dallas club in the fall of 1909, and did well from the start. This season he has developed into one of the most promising youngsters that the year has produced. He is somewhat crude yet, but under McGraw's careful management he will become a star twirler.

That is, everything points that way. He is a raw youth now—"an overgrown kid," as McGraw says but he is a student of the game, and being such, is sure to master all the intricacies of the pitcher's game. That Drucke asks questions of older players is in his favor. He asks so many questions of Mathewson that the latter has limited him to one a day. But to Mathewson's credit it can be stated that he gives the tall Texan all the information that he can and coaches him constantly. This is somewhat rare for any old player to do, and is therefore noticeable. It will be interesting to watch Drucke's career under the instruction of such a master as the premier pitcher of the country. I do not hesitate to say that Drucke will be a second Christy Mathewson in time.

In Marquard, Shontz and Teserau the Giants, too, have three pitchers whom I think will make their marks in big league class. Marquard was possibly unfortunate in being obliged to make good for being the "$11,000 beauty," and under that handicap he has up to date failed to come up to expectations, but I look for him to come into his own next season. He has everything that a pitcher can have with the exception of control. Of course that is a most grievous fault, but he will overcome it. Shontz and Teserau have yet to show, but they will.

De Palma Sets a New Record

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 24.—Ralph De Palma in a Fiat car today lowered the world's automobile record for 10 miles on a circular track, held by himself, on the track of the Belmont Driving club at Narberth, near here. He covered the distance in 8:21 1-5. The former record was 8:48, made some time ago in St. Paul.

The exhibition was given under the auspices of the Morristown Automobile club.

More Records by Flanagan

MONTREAL, Quebec, Sept. 24.—John J. Flanagan created a new Canadian record for the 16-pound hammer throw at the Canadian amateur athletic championships here today. Flanagan tossed the hammer 179 feet, 2½ inches, 5 feet, 7½ inches better than the previous record.

Competitors from the United States ran away with the majority of the events on the program, members of the Irish-American Athletic club of New York being the most prominent with the Boston A. A. A. team making a good second.

CON WALSH HANGS UP TWO WORLD'S RECORDS

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—At Travers Island today, during the annual fall games of the New York Athletic club, two new world's records were made by Con Walsh, of the New York Athletic club.

In throwing the 16-pound weight for height, he heaved the missile 16 feet, 6 3-16 inches, beating his own world figures of 16 feet, 2 7-8 inches. He preceded this performance with a record throw of 33½ feet, 1 inch, with the 56-pound weight from a stand without run or follow. The former world's record of 31 feet, 8 inches, was made by H. McDonald last February.

The total amount of prizes offered for the Atlanta, Ga., meet, November 3, 4 and 5, is $11,750, covering three days of racing.

Handicap Match Is Won by Graham

C. G. Graham, with a handicap of 8, won yesterday's 18-hole handicap match at the Colorado Springs Golf club. Tad Jones, Famous Yale Star, Criticises and Commends the Revised Football Code

By TAD JONES,

(Former Star Quarterback at Yale, and Famous Coach.)

What the game of football is coming to since the last bickering with the rules is a very grave question and one that will not be answered until the season is well advanced.

Part of the legislation makes for the betterment of the game beyond a doubt, but another part seems to be uncalled for. After a careful study, however, it seems that fewer and less serious inquiries will be an assured fact, and if such is the case, the changes will have accomplished a very great good.

To the spectator the game will be very much the same as the old one, with a few exceptions. The legislation in regard to the forward pass and onside kick has made these plays so complex that even the coaches and officials will have a difficult time ascertaining just when they are legal.

The game is now divided into four periods of 15 minutes each, 60 minutes in all, with the usual intermission of 15 minutes between the second and third periods, but a three-minute intermission only between the first and second and third and fourth periods.

During these short intermissions no player is allowed to leave the field, nor any representative come on the field excepting the one who looks after the physical condition of the players.

This bit of legislation may and may not be productive of good results. It should make fewer inquiries, but it is a question as to its effect on the game, and many are they who believe the rule affecting substitution sufficient. This rule makes it legal to return a player to the game at the beginning of any subsequent period, provided that the player had been removed for causes other than disqualification or suspicion.

It is surely a fact that a "march down the field" usually takes more time than 15 minutes—and some of the very prettiest plays seen on the gridiron have been toward the ends of the halves, when the players realize that the time is becoming very short.

The players should not become exhausted playing such short periods, and accidents such as occurred to Cadet Bryne in the Harvard-West Point game last fall will never occur, for Byrne was completely exhausted by the heavy hammering he had received at the hands of the Harvard backs before the accident happened.

It is just this kind of thing that the rule of the four periods will prevent, but the same result might have been accomplished by the substitution of players, which is also permitted. The great trouble with the rule affecting substitution is that it makes possible a great deal of "jockeying." However, the spirit of both changes was good, and we hope the results will be likewise.

The forward pass came in for its share of notoriety, with the result that it is now limited to 20 yards. To be more exact, the ball may now be passed by the side getting the ball in play, the pass being legal, providing the player who is making the pass is at least four yards behind the line of scrimmage and the ball does not travel a distance greater than 20 yards beyond the defensive line of scrimmage. The ball may now cross the scrimmage line at any point, the old five-yard restriction being removed.

The players eligible to receive the pass are the same as those under the old rules, namely, the men at the end of the line and those behind the line of scrimmage. This legislation in connection with the forward pass, will, in all probability, make a big difference in the use of the play. In the west surely the forward pass will be as it has been—the prominent feature of the game. In the east it will be interesting to watch its development. Now that the ball may cross the line at any place there are three points that may be attacked instead of two—the center and both ends—when formerly it was merely the two ends. This fact will weaken the defense and give opportunity for open play.

The forward pass itself seems to be a better play, but its danger remains the same. The player about to receive the forward pass cannot be interefered with under the new rules. It is permissible, however, to "tackle" the ball; that is, to catch or make the attempt to catch the ball while it is in the air. It is here that the danger lies, for when we find several players going together in an attempt to get the ball, we are apt to have serious injuries, for the men are out of position usually and unable to see the position of their opponents and accidents occur to men in just such awkward positions as a general rule. Since the first year of the "old" rules the forward pass has played but little part in the eastern game.

It will, in all probability, meet with the same fate after perhaps a good "try-out" under the "new" rules, for the eastern coaches and players seem to have a prejudice against the play, due to the weakness of the play itself. The fact that the ball may now be passed over the line at any place may make the play so much stronger that it will hold in the east, where the defensive strength of the players is so much greater than that of the western teams, and because of which the forward pass has never met with much success. In any case it will be interesting to watch its development.

The legislation applying to the forward pass also governs the onside kick, with the exception that the kick must go more than 20 yards beyond the defensive line of scrimmage. This rule does away with the short onside kick just over the line—that the Princeton team of 1908 used so successfully. It does not affect, however, the kicks that were used last fall to any great extent, for the successful kicks of last season were the long low ones away from the defensive men in the back field. These, of course, traveled more than 20 yards, and were usually made from a regular kick formation; hence the legislation in connection with the forward pass does not affect them in any way.

He will be a valuable man to his team who can place his kicks accurately and time them, as did Veeder of Yale and Douglas of Annapolis. Under the new rules, as under the old, the kicking game will be the strength of an eleven's attack and its offense shall be known by its kicker. It is good to see a premium placed upon skillful kicking ability, for "kicking" is football.

The player who first receives the ball after it has been snapped back may now cross the line of scrimmage at any point. This means that a quarterback is no longer necessary to pass the ball to his backs, for now the ball may be received direct. As direct passes from center to halfback are much faster and surer, the game should be correspondingly fast and free from fumbles. The straight line plunges of the old game and the short-end runs should be good ground-gainers because of the greater speed with which they can be started. The quarterback will be called upon to perform just as halfbacks; in fact, his duties will practically be the same. He must be a good ground-gainer himself and a good interfere, as well as a good field general.

Seven players of the side holding the ball must be on the line of scrimmage. Interlocked interference; that is, players of the side in possession of the ball grasping one another or using their arms or hands in any way to push or pull the man running with the ball is prohibited. This rule does away with the last semblance of the old mass play; the runner must now make his way alone and unaided by his teammates, excepting in straight interference. The interference must be ahead of the runner—never behind him.

The "diving" tackle is prohibited—but a real "diving" tackle only occurs about once a season. The legislation against this play will not be felt.

We hope the new game will prove a safer one. We are sure it will be a more difficult one for players, for coaches and for officials, but a couple of months of actual play only can put the stamp of approval or disapproval upon the recent changes.

The Motor Contest association has decided to indefinitely postpone the Catskill reliability contest and hill climb because many of the New York dealers have failed to get delivery of the 1911 models, which they intended to use in the tour and hill climb.

The management of the New Jersey State fair, which is to be held at Olympic park the first week in October, has set aside Friday of that week as Automobile Day, and a special feature is an automobile parade through the principal streets of Newark.

NEWS AND COMMENT HEARD ON THE SPORTSMAN'S BEAT

THE SEASON OF 1911 is not likely to see so many changes in managers in the National league as came about a year ago. In 1909, Philadelphia, Boston and Brooklyn had pilots who lost their jobs when the season ended. This is the first year for Dahlen, Lake and Dooin in their present berths, and it is likely that all will be retained for another season. Dooin is the only one about whom there is any doubt at present. Philadelphia fans are not likely to blame the red-headed manager for the failure of the Phillies this season, for they understand the handicaps under which he has worked. With a man like President Fogel to contend with, it is a wonder that Dooin's charges are in fourth place. It is reported on good authority that the Philadelphia syndicate is tired of Fogel and that he is due to walk the plank this winter. With one or two exceptions, perhaps, there is no club in the league better equipped with pitching material than the Quakers, and their success next year will depend largely upon the man that Murphy and Taft select as Fogel's successor.

WILL WALTER JOHNSON, the big Swede whom Jennings considers the coming greatest pitcher in the national game, put Charlie Street, considered by many as the best catcher in the league, out of business? Washington recently got Beckendorf from Detroit and also bought a catcher named Henry. Both are working to relieve Street. The reason Street is not catching every game is that he has badly ripped fingers. They are bruised and swollen as a result of stopping the pitched balls of the marvelous speed merchant, Johnson. Street is game and has been doing the backstop work for Johnson in nearly all of his games, but he has been forced to take things easy because of injured hands. If Street continues to catch Johnson his days as a backstop will be short-lived.

THE DECISION OF the United States Lawn Tennis association not to send a team abroad to attempt to lift the international Davis trophy is to be regretted, but, in face of conditions, no other course was open to the committee on arrangements. The first stroke of misfortune was the decision of William A. Larned, national champion, not to compete in deference to his father's wishes. Then the committee gained the consent of M. E. McLoughlin and tried to get Thomas C. Bundy. These players are Californians and crackerjacks, and perhaps able to bring the Davis cup to the United States. When it was believed that Bundy would accept and pair with McLoughlin, advices were received that it would be impossible for him to accept the tender because of business reasons. Since there was no substitute the association has called the trip off.

EASTERN BOWLERS have again renewed the controversy with regard to the use of the loaded ball. About two years ago the New York Bowling association let down the bars in the matter of the lead-cored sphere, but a committee which has been considering the subject for the last two weeks has come out with a recommendation to rescind the rule. For a while the eastern devotees of the game were content with matters as they stood, but experience seems to show that loaded balls in the hands of crack players are not conducive to the best interests of the game any more than rutty alleys or steam-dried pins. With the official competitive season just beginning, the rule makers regarding the tenpin game should get together. Loaded balls are under the ban in western and midwestern matches.

IN ALL PROBABILITY there will be a corps of official scorers who will travel with the teams of both big leagues next season. Robert L. Hedges, president of the St. Louis Americans, plans to offer the necessary legislation to create this new branch of baseball at the annual meeting of the American league in December. For some time there has been a campaign on to have an official scoring corps, but not until Hedges offered a suggestion to have former ball players appointed for that purpose did full interest become aroused. Now every magnate in the league as well as the players are in favor of the scheme. As planned, the official scorer must be a ball player from one of the major organizations. The appointment of a scoring staff would solve a perplexing problem and there could hardly be a protest from their decisions.

FOREIGN BASEBALL players of the highest rank are rare, yet some of the notable stars of the day are imported. Jimmy Archer of the Cubs and Roger Bresnahan of the Cardinals are productions of Ireland. Harry Smith of the Doves is an Englishman, and George Gibson of the Pirates is a Canadian. So is Russell Ford, one of the best pitchers in the American league.

FRANK NEWHOUSE, referred to as the best umpire this season in the Central league, will get a tryout in the American league next season, according to a news dispatch. While Newhouse has come in for much criticism in some lines of athletics he is regarded as a good umpire, and if given a fair trial may make good on Ban Johnson's staff next year.

CY YOUNG HAS the ball with which he finished his five hundredth major league victory safely stowed away in his grip. You couldn't get it for love nor money. It is the second ball the veteran pitcher ever saved. The other is the one he hurled at Chief Zimmer when the Cleveland Spiders won the Temple cup series away back in the nineties. The ball Cy pitched in his no-hit, no-man-reached-first game against the Athletics, is owned by Lou Criger, who caught him that day.

Probabilities for the World Series

If Stanley Robison of St. Louis loosens up and donates that last Saturday on the National league schedule, Cub fans will vote him a warm token of appreciation. The latest tip to the outside world, however, is that the above schedule will be carried out to the letter.

Three games will be played in Chicago, when the scene of carnage will be transferred to Philadelphia. Then, if a seventh contest is necessary, a flip of a coin will decide where this is to be played.

MANY MUSICAL ARTISTS DUE HERE THIS SEASON

In line with the policy adopted at the annual meeting several months ago, the Colorado Springs Musical club will bring some of the best artists in the musical world to this city during the coming season.

Kocian, a Bohemian violinist who has but recently come to the notice of the world as an artist will be one of the early attractions. Others will be Gerville-Reache prima contralto in the Metropolitan opera house New York, and Gogorza the Spanish baritone, who will give a joint recital and Josef Hofman, known the world over for his exquisite execution on the piano.

The club holds its first meeting of the season the second Monday in November.

MRS. E. S. COHEN AGAIN IS ELECTED TO OFFICE

At the meeting of the grand chapter of the Eastern Star at Denver last week, two Colorado Springs members were elected to office. Mrs. E. S. Cohen was re-elected grand secretary, and Mrs. Carrie T. Richards was made grand warder. Mrs. Cohen has for 19 years held the office to which she was re-elected.

President Taft will be invited this year to witness the annual Fairmount Park race at Philadelphia October 8th. The city council is expected to appropriate $2,000 toward the event.

Notable Week in History of Colorado Springs

BRIGHT LIGHTS AND GAY, WAVING FLAGS AND BUNTING WELCOMED THE HUNDREDS OF DELEGATES TO THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION

Exchange National Bank Building to the Left, With the Durkee Block and The Gazette Building to the Right.

NEVER before in its history has Colorado Springs assumed such a gala attire as that in which it was dressed last week in honor of the Republican state convention which was held in Temple theater Tuesday and Wednesday. At night the business section of the city was as bright as day, powerful arc lights, 16 at each street intersection being augmented by thousands upon thousands of twinkling incandescents hung in ropes and festoons from scores of buildings. The big "G. O. P." elephant outlined in electric lights in front of the Antlers hotel attracted perhaps the most attention of any single decoration, while The Gazette, Durkee Exchange National bank, Mining Exchange and other buildings including the court house came in for their share of popular approval.

The Gazette building with its [illegible] rows of red, white and blue lights and the big Gazette sign above the structure were particularly noticed and James F. Burns, owner of the Durkee building, just east of The Gazette, was heartily praised for his public spirit in making this structure among the best decorated in town. His act is especially commendable in view of the fact that the Durkee building is vacant and brings in no revenue. Mr. Burns even strung a rope of electric lights across the vacant lot between The Gazette and the Durkee buildings, which is owned by him.

Respond Right Royally.

Right royally did all the merchants and business men generally respond to the appeal for widespread decoration and there was scarcely a store or office in the downtown district that was not brilliantly lighted all week. The Elks club and all hotels especially presented a beautiful appearance.

As for flags and bunting Colorado Springs "done herself proud." With flags and streamers waving from every pole and available point on the business streets and with every structure more or less literally covered with the patriotic red, white and blue, the whole town lent itself to the spirit of enthusiasm which was the order of the day. Temple theater, the convention hall was decorated with flags on the outside and the interior was a mass of flags and other adornments all artistically arranged. Potted plants and flowers covered the floor of the stage, and photographs of Taft and former presidents of the United States were proudly displayed. So lavishly was the theater decorated that scarcely a bit of woodwork showed excepting the floor and chairs.

Warm words of praise were heard on all sides regarding the way this city turned out to welcome the hundreds of delegates and "Little London's" already widespread reputation as a convention town was greatly enhanced.

Deserves Much Credit.

No small share of the credit for the success of the elaborate decorations is due the Colorado Springs Light, Heat and Power company which at an expense of between $2,000 and $3,000 furnished free current to everybody who installed the lamps and attended to the adornment scheme. Everywhere was evident a unanimity of spirit and willingness to show the state delegates what Colorado Springs can do in this line, and this feature, perhaps, is the most significant of the entire convention week.

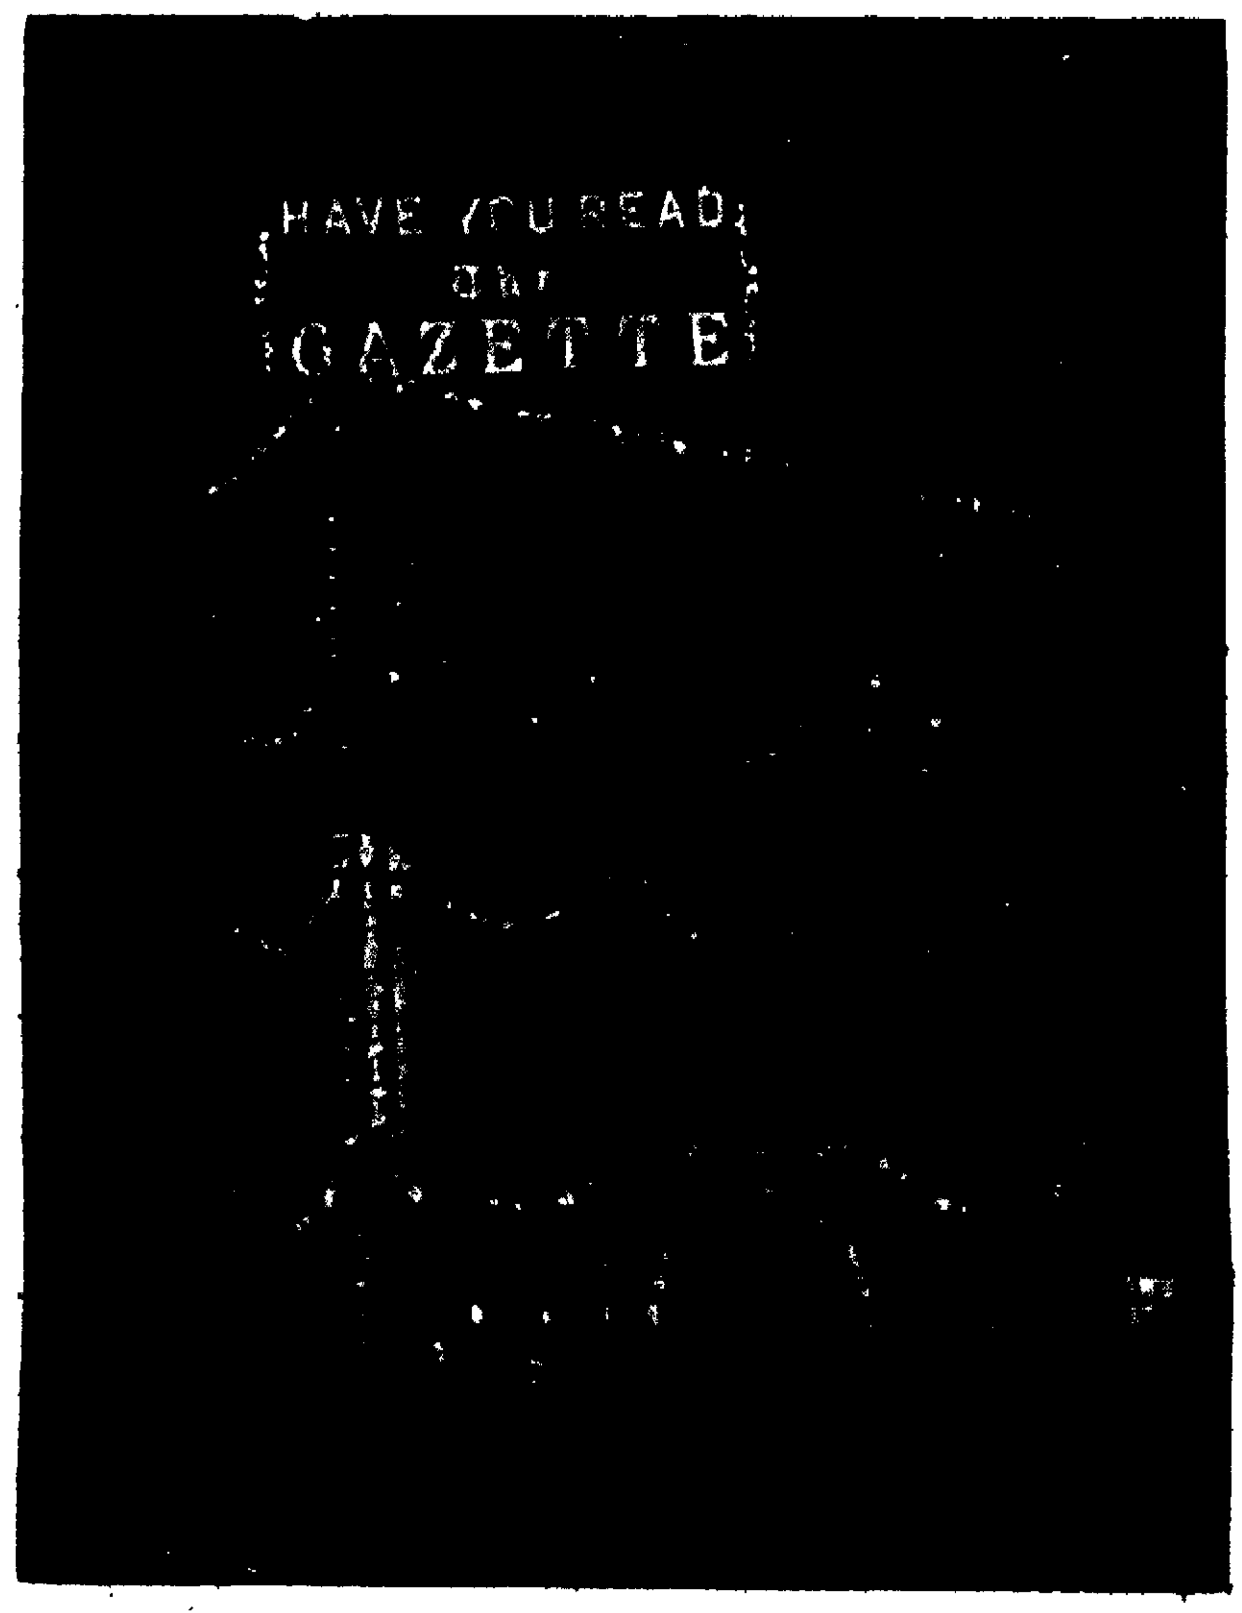

Not the least pleasing phase of the convention was the fact that not a single complaint of any kind was made to the police by the delegates. This is remarkable, considering the many thefts which characterize most conventions of anywhere near the magnitude of the one just held. The visitors expressed themselves as more than pleased in every respect, and the police protection, together with the care exercised by Fire Chief McCartin and his men in watching out for possible fires at Temple theater, had the building thoroughly inspected as to its safety by a committee of competent engineers and architects before the convention was held. The courtesy extended to the delegates by the residents of Colorado Springs will also go a long way in advertising the community as an ideal convention city.

This city has shown that it can take care of a big convention in a manner that would reflect credit to a community many times its size, both as regards hotel accommodations, general protection and uniform courtesy all around on the part of its residents. A well satisfied visitor is the best advertisement any town can have and Colorado Springs may rest assured that 972 enthusiastic delegates, in addition to their families and friends many of whom were here during the convention, will boost henceforth for the city of lights", as well as "the city of sunshine." Taking it all in all, the town and its inhabitants couldn't do better if they had to do it all over again. It is such spirit as this which makes for the greatest progress of any city.

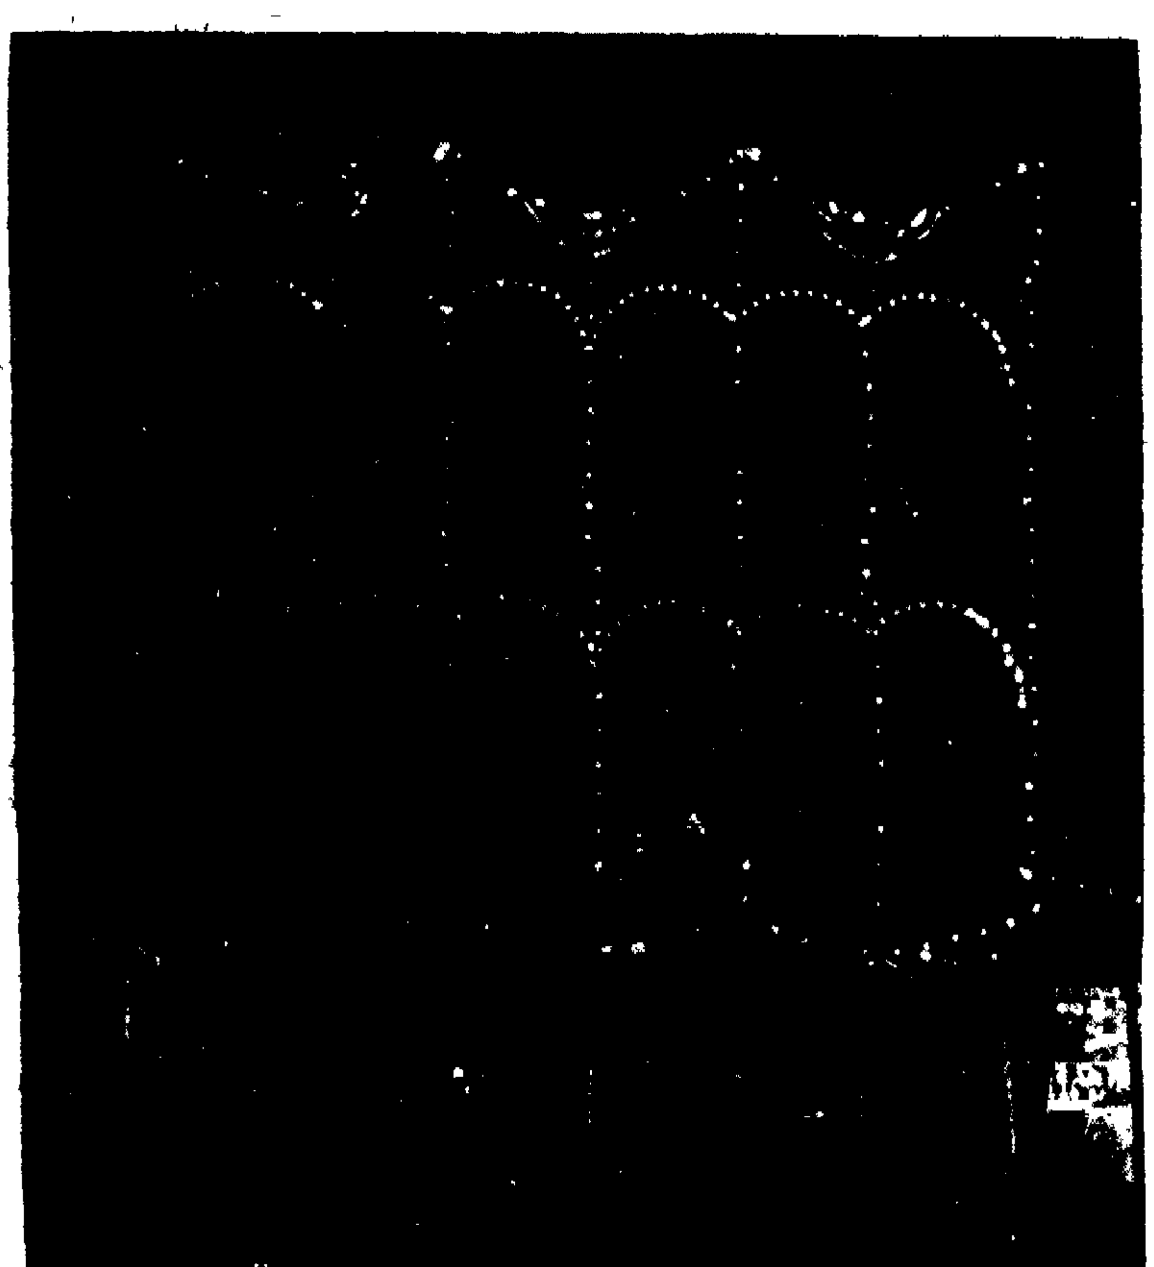

Visitors Good Fellows

And the visitors themselves were royal good fellows. Taking everything as it came in a philosophical manner, the most bitter factional enemies in formal convention were the best of friends personally, jollying each other to the queen's taste. Even the "insurgents" and the "regulars" from Denver county, each composing a delegation 187 strong, bantered and joked among themselves, the regulars in a triumphant mood and the unsuccessful progressives in a wait-and-you'll-see frame of mind.

Last, but not least, the officers of the convention and of the state central committee merit hearty commendation for their efficient conduct of the big meeting. Former Chairman Work and Secretary Blair of the committee did strenuous work in arranging for the affair, and, with Sergeant-at-Arms M. F. Viancourt of [illegible] saw to it that the newspaper men were in a position to get the fullest news of the proceedings.

HENRY MILLER IN "HER HUSBAND'S WIFE"
Henry Miller will be seen at the Opera House Tuesday evening in A. E. Thomas' latest farce, "Her Husband's Wife," preceded by Clyde Fitch's one-act playlet, "Frederic Le Maitre"

RECOLLECTIONS OF ADELAIDE NEILSEN

By Henry Miller.

In my opinion, Adelaide Neilson was the last of the great actresses. It is true, I was very young when I studied her acting, and youthful impressions are likely to be over-colored. But, in my memory, I can still hear the wonderful bell-like quality of her voice, and I can still see the mobile beauty that made her balcony scene in "Romeo and Juliet" something never to be forgotten. Her acting held audiences in rapt attention. It was no less amazing to those of us who watched from the wings the revelations of genius which custom did not stale.

I was quite a young chap when I first joined her company, and she amused herself very often by teasing me when I blundered in my work. One night she stood in the wings chatting with me.

"What role do you like me best in?" she asked.

"I don't think I could select just one role," I answered.

"Well, what role do you like me least in?" she persisted.

After a moment's hesitation, I said, "Juliet." It was her most famous character, and she studied my face with thoughtful eyes.

"Why Juliet?" she inquired in a curiously altered voice.

"Because," I stammered "you never seem as natural in that to me as in the other characters."

"You are quite right,' she said after a moment's pause, "entirely right in your judgment. Juliet is the only role in which I never feel quite natural. I think it is because I was laboriously drilled in that, while the others I worked out for myself."

After that she never guyed me when I made mistakes.

I shall never forget the first time I saw Neilson play Viola in "Twelfth Night." I had been given the part of the sea captain, and I watched her closely as she made her first entrance, in the second scene of the play.

"What country, friends, is this?" is Viola's first speech. When to my "This is Illyria," lady," she spoke the words, "And what shall I do in Illyria?" Neilson gazed about her for a few moments, as though musing on her loneliness in the strange land, then her eyes filled with tears, and as she continued the speech about her brother, the tears rolled down her cheeks.

Of course, tears are not an unusual manifestation; but it showed that the great actress felt the part the moment she stepped on the stage and the sorrow pictured on her face was emphasized by the true, clear inflections of her wonderful, wonderful voice.

At the time of Neilson's great triumphs, we did not carry scenery or "props" when we traveled from one town to another. Each theater furnished the settings and so on that were required. We did however carry a few letters and sometimes a parchment role from which we could read imaginary proclamations or set forth the dishes that were to be served at the very imaginary dinners, suppers or banquets. For my part I remember very distinctly that I possessed the elaborate equipment of two entirely different colored pairs of tights.

Hotel accommodations were decidedly worse at that time than in even the smallest "one-night stands" of the present. I remember one Christmas day, in the thriving city of Jacksonville, Ill. The hotel rooms were not heated, so we spent the day gathered around the stove in the hotel lobby. In spite of the miserable surroundings, Neilson was very cheerful, and kept up in good spirits by her sallies of wit and fund of clever anecdotes. The Christmas dinner was almost as bad as our stage feasts, but the great actress made no complaints, although she did send out for some sweets to supplement the discouraging hotel fare provided.

There were few first-class theaters in Neilson's time, but the standard of acting was certainly equal to that of today—possibly much higher.

DENVER PRAISES BILLY CLIFFORD

The Denver Republican of last Monday has the following to say of Billy Clifford in his latest musical comedy, "The Girl, the Man and the Game," which this popular comedian will present at the Opera House Monday evening:

Billy S. Clifford, whose chief claim to distinction as an actor lies in the fact that he gets very familiar with his audience, presented himself at the Tabor yesterday in a piece called "The Girl, the Man and the Game"—a composite of pseudo-musical chorus and nearly farcical plot. The offering ought to be popular at the Tabor. Its success, if it wins success, will be based largely on two or three songs, a few good dance steps, a "beauty chorus" that looks really handsome to the spectator who sits anywhere back of the middle of the parquet and Billy Clifford himself.

Still, the offering is one that might well tempt the loiterer out of the rainy streets. There is fun in it. And even the ultracritical may enjoy the opportunity afforded to smile in their pitying, patronising way. But it was a sympathetic audience that assembled yesterday afternoon in the Tabor.

The plot of the piece is a story of a young man who has a wealthy uncle and wants to get his wealth. To get it he writes to his uncle that he has been married and has a child. This pleases the uncle more than it was intended to do. So the young nephew not only gets the money that he wants, but also a message that he does not want, stating that his uncle is about to take a journey across the world to see the happy family. There isn't any family, and that is where the fun starts. The nephew gets his best friend to lend him his wife for the occasion. That starts the elements of jealousy and other complications upon which farce is properly woven.

Billy Clifford plays the part of the nephew, and he is about as funny in that role as he is any other. Adele Archer does some acceptable work in the role of the bogus wife. Hazel Swanson is quite charming in the role of the true but submerged sweetheart of the young nephew, and Jack Trainor supplies some of the best of the comedy in playing the part of the uncle.

Hazel Swanson dances well, both alone and in combination with Clifford. Adele Archer has one or two good singing numbers.

HENRY MILLER

The oft-repeated statement that dramatic critics are merely disappointed playwrights received another staggering blow at the Garrick last night when 'Her Husband's Wife,' a comedy by A. E. Thomas, a dramatic critic on the Sun, registered a definite success," said the New York Evening Mail last year. "Whether Mr. Thomas was induced to write this play because of the worthlessness of many of the pieces he has criticised, or whether his technical faculty has come from watching the stagecraft of others, is a question not worthy of debate, in view of the fact that the play itself is the thing, and in this instance a 'thing' that will attract to the box office, as well as please the more carping reviewers for the press. Mr. Thomas has interspersed his dialogue with many witty lines, and here is a sprightliness in his characters and a spontaneity in his situations that make 'Her Husband's Wife' a bright and breezy comedy which everybody should see."

"The author of 'Her Husband's Wife,'" says the New York Globe, "calls his play a philosophic and quizzical comedy. It is also an epigrammatic farce, and it is so light and gay and carefree that it doesn't seem fair to weight it with such big words, for first and foremost, it is to laugh. The central idea is original and developed with quaint and imaginative twists and turns which provide surprises and afford opportunities for clearer and more humorous characterizations than one usually finds in plays. The three acts are played in one room, which is the prettiest room seen in a play this winter. Its color is a poem."

Henry Miller and his New York and Chicago company will present "Her Husband's Wife" at the Opera House for one night only, Tuesday. Clyde Fitch's one-act playlet, "Frederic Le Maitre," will preceed "Her Husband's Wife."

JEFFRIES-JOHNSON PRIZE FIGHT PICTURES

The great Jeffries-Johnson fight which so recently created an international stir in sporting circles, is still in the forefront as the moving pictures of that event are now being shown and thousands of people throughout the land are crowding the theaters nightly to witness these wonderful films.

The pictures are pronounced perfect and if possible even more realistic than the encounter itself as they embrace a much more comprehensive scope. Every move and blow of the great fight is pictorially reproduced in perfect clearness and detail. The audience watches with bated breath as these Twentieth century gladiators battle the most remarkable 15 rounds in the history of the ring.

In addition to the fight proper, several thousand feet of interesting pictures are shown, depicting the crowds in Reno before the fight, the fighters training and conditioning for the contest, the crowds surging into the arena, etc. Wherever shown the pictures are breaking all records for attendance and ladies as well as men crowd the theaters. These pictures represent an outlay of $200,000 and are conceded to be the most perfect moving pictures ever shown.

Our citizens will have an opportunity to see these remarkable views on Friday and Saturday, as they are billed to appear at the Opera House on those dates.

ONE HUNDRED MINUTES OF RARE ENTERTAINMENT

That phrase summarizes the Majestic's show for this week, beginning tomorrow afternoon. It is a big bill, a remarkably strong and generous offering at such low prices as 10, 20 and 30 cents, and would be at twice the money. There is comedy, music and instruction in it, with mirth and laughter the dominant note throughout; it is a show that will make you feel happier and better natured.

"Laugh and the world laughs with you" is the motto of Will H. Armstrong, who, with a clever company, will present "The Expressman," that famous farcical skit in which he created that delightful character, the man who hauls the trunks. Mr Armstrong is a whole show in himself, and his sketch is full of the most mirth-provoking situations and dialogue. Do not fail to see it. "Laugh, and the world laughs with you."

The same motto might be applied to Murray K. Hill, with whom, for years, the whole world laughed. His name is a household word, for who does not know of him through hearing his amusing ditties and laughable tales from the mouths of phonographs? His appearance in Colorado Springs will give Majestic patrons an opportunity to hear his records reproduced, and, as a special treat, the management will accept requests at the box office for any special records patrons desire. Mr. Hill, as an original monologist and singer, is of course better than Mr. Hill as a phonographic artist, and no one should miss hearing him.

More fun of the uproarious sort is promised by Billy Doranto in his Chinese character impersonation and musical novelty introducing instruments and music direct from Hong Kong, China. His makeup, manner and talk are perfect imitations of the Celestial, and he is a laugh throughout.

In Cabaret's dogs will be a delightful treat for the children, and all should see this act. Its engagement closes Friday, but on Saturday the famous Anita Diaz troupe of trained monkeys will take its place.

"The King of Beggars,' an amusing and instructive story presented by the Majestiscope, and the fine concert orchestra program of the Majestic orchestra, directed by Prof. George Hockenberger, will make up a truly great program, and one that will meet favor with all.

Theatrical Calendar

Monday, "The Girl, the Man and the Game"—The first musical comedy of the season will be Billy Clifford's appearance at the Opera House tomorrow evening in "The Girl, the Man and the Game." The Denver press spoke highly of this affair, of the actor, of the company and of the production.

Tuesday, "Her Husband's Wife"—Henry Miller, who was last seen here in "The Great Divide," will return to the Opera House Tuesday evening in a new comedy, "Her Husband's Wife." This will be preceded by Clyde Fitch's one-act playlet, "Frederic Le Maitre," a strong dramatic sketch.

Friday, Jeffries-Johnson Pictures—Manager Nye of the Opera House will present the Jeffries-Johnson prize fight pictures at the Opera House, Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee of this week, for the first time here. These pictures were shown in Denver a few weeks ago.

Majestic Theater—Commencing Monday matinee and all week, Sullivan and Considine imperial vaudeville. Will H. Armstrong and company, in the farcial skit, "The Expressman;" Billy Doranto, Chinese character musical expert; Murray K. Hill, the jolly songologist, Swift and Casey, eccentric musical comedians. A splendid feature for the little folks, Carbaret's dogs, highly trained canine wonders, for five days only. Special for Saturday, Anita Daiz's monkeys. Majestiscope, the King of Beggars; Majestic concert orchestra.

Plays and Players

Louise Closser Hale, whose work in various past productions has won for her an enviable place upon the younger actresses, will have the role of Fairy Berylune in Maeterlink's drama, "The Bluebird," when that fantasy is presented for the first time in this country at the New theater in November.

Holbrook Blinn, whose performance of the gambler in Eleanor Robson's production of "Salomy Jane," and whose portrayals in support of Mrs Fiske in "Salvation Nell," "Pillars of Society" and "Becky Sharp," have placed him high among the younger actors of the day, is to be starred this season in Edward Sheldon's newest work, drama, "The Boss." Sheldon is also author of "Salvation Nell" and "The Nigger."

Nella Bergen will be in the support of Sam Bernard in "The Duke's Understudy" this season. Miss Bergen's last appearance on the stage was two season's ago in "The Talk of New York."

William A. Brady has organized an all star stock company composed of Florence Roberts, Charles Richman, Charles Cherry, Theodore Roberts, Milton Sills, Effingham Pinto, Chrystal Herne, Sarah Cowell Le Moyne and other well known players and stars. The company will revive at intervals of three weeks each famous old successes. The first production was "Diplomacy." The company will also appear in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and Brooklyn.

John Mason will make a tour to the [illegible] in Augustus Thomas' successful drama "The Witching Hour," which ran for an entire season in New York but has not yet been seen in the west.

A CHORUS SCENE FROM "THE GIRL, THE MAN AND THE GAME."

New York Theatrical Letter

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—At the present moment there seems to be a lull in the theatrical season. The managers are holding back to get an idea of the way the public receives their early present productions which were put on in August and the first part of September. Two new productions a week seem to be about the limit at the present time but there are enough new plays to carry on the the season into October when a flood of new plays will be presented. While the warm weather has hit the box office receipts rather hard the managers are nevertheless optimistic over the outlook for the present season and the public can have no complaint on the class of plays that are being presented.

Such musical shows as "Madame Sherry" at the New Amsterdam theater and the "Echo" at the Globe theater, are a credit to the season. These two plays are products of the present season and are undoubtedly due for long runs. Other excellent musical attractions are "Our Miss Gibbs" at the Knickerbocker theater, "The Arcadians," at the New York theater, and "Tillie's Nightmare," at the Herald Square theater. These two last named are hold-overs from last year and are still very popular.

In comedies the present season is extremely wealthy. "Smith," at the Empire theater with John Drew in the title role, and "Baby Mine," at Daly's theater, and "The Commuters" at the Criterion theater have settled down for long runs. "The Brass Bottle" at the Lyceum theater, and "Love Among the Lions" at the Carrick theater, also deserve favorable mention.

A play which has attracted considerable attention and has proven very popular is "The Country Boy," now being produced at the Liberty theater, and despite the fact that the subject is worn threadbare, Edgar Selwyn has handled it in an unique manner and made it intensely interesting.

The dramatic element among the present productions is extremely limited—"Mother," a new play at the Hackett theater, which has been reviewed in these columns, is the only new production of this kind. "Alias Jimmy Valentine," at Wallack's theater; "The Lily," at the Belasco theater, and "Madame X" at the Lyric are all last season's successes.

After slumbering peacefully for a decade, "Diplomacy," that famous masterpiece by Sardou, has been removed from among the moth balls, thoroughly renovated, and produced in a new Broadway playhouse, with a modern cast—and on this last phrase hangs a sad tale.

With the play, we are all acquainted. Sardou, like many of the old-time melodramatists, had his faults, and some are apparent in "Diplomacy," but notwithstanding these, the piece is a powerful one.

We will, therefore, devote our comment to the cast, which may be termed a miscast without any danger of libel.

The players in this revival have all earned a reputation, and their failure in "Diplomacy" is not due to any lack of histrionic ability, but more to a lack of rehearsals and the fact that they were not cast properly.

Throughout the entire performance, when the play recently opened at Maxine Elliott's theater, there was every evidence of haste in the rehearsals and of incomplete preparations. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the whole play proved interesting and some of the strong scenes were effectively handled. The male roles, of course, have the majority of the heavy work, and Theodore Roberts as Baron Stein carried off the laurels. With the aid of an amazingly interestingly make-up, he played the character of the amusing old rascal very effectively. He injected all the cunning and duplicity which is necessary to a character of this kind and at the same time injected that peculiar charm which made the Baron persona grata in circles where he was above suspicion.

The role of Henry Beauclerc was played by Charles Richman, who appeared as Julian in the notable revival of "Diplomacy" a decade ago. He need make no apologies for his performances. His repose and dignity of bearing won for him all the honors that did not go to Mr. Roberts. As Julian Beauclerc, Milton Sills made an earnest effort but was far below the standard. He did not show any trace of the fervent ardor which the young lover was supposed to possess, and his attire as the military attache of a British embassy was impossible.

Thurlow Bergan played the role of Count Orloff and his performance was effective and correct.

Countess Zicka, the leading female role was handled by Florence Roberts in a mediocre manner. To Miss Robert's credit, let it be said that she has been seen in more effective parts. As the Countess she was totally miscast. When her acting should have been subtle and fascinating she was sound and capable and her plotting was too obvious.

Chrystal Herne as Dora captured the laurels among the female members of the cast. In her long list of predecessors there has never been a more natural, tender exponent of misrepresented innocence.

Mrs. Sarah Lemoyne was agreeable in the role of Marquis de Rio Zaros. A change of a few members in the cast and rehearsals for several months would work wonders. At present there is no "atmosphere" in the presentation of this familiar play. Hundreds of little touches which have been evident in early presentations are lacking. As the play goes on, it will undoubtedly improve, but it is a question whether the box receipts will carry it along until that improvement is worked.

"WELCOME TO OUR CITY"

"Welcome to Our City," a new play recently produced at the Bijou theater, did not receive a very cordial welcome, in fact the welcome might be called a "frost" and the Broadway life of this pitiable farce is destined to be very brief. New Yorkers see the best, and at the same time the worst plays. Within the past few seasons they have become accustomed to poor plays. But "Welcome to Our City" cannot even be classed among the poor plays. It is an overripe lemon.

It is described as a German farce, made over by George Hobart, and like all German farces, evidently had its origin in Paris. It does not depart from the general style of its kind. The chivalry of a Southern Colonel on a visit to New York with his family leads him to respond to the casual greeting of a woman he meets on Broadway. She is the agent of a reform society has the visitor arrested, but not taken to court. He relates his misfortune to his son-in-law, who responds to this confidence with a recital of his own worries from fear that a shop-girl to whom he had once been attentive, will carry out her threat and claim a $10,000 forfeit from him now that he has taken advantage of her absence in Europe to marry another.

What follows this posture of circumstances recites chiefly the efforts of the two men to keep away from the two women on their trail. They theaten exposure and possibly more serious consequences, and involve the chivalrous Southerner and his son-in-law with such varied persons as a sea captain and a singing teacher and her husband to add paprika to the mixture. The ingredients are familiar enough and theatergoers need not be very imaginative to picture the kind of dramatic action that follows the combination of these premises and these characters. That they are not novel is little disadvantage in a play. We are assured that the best in the theater is the oldest. It seems rather important, however, that it should not seem old.

Maclyn Arbuckle is listed as the star, and plays the part of the Southern Colonel. Mr. Arbuckle has a homely unctuous humor, which could not be exhbited to less advantage than in the new piece. His most obvious southern quality was his occasional drinking of a mint julep.

Among the other players who deserve to be mentioned are Maidel Turner, Rosalie de Veaux and Louis White.

"COUNTESS SWIRSKY"

Barefoot dancers in questionable attire seem to be the rage at vaudeville houses. New York now has a real live countess perouetting in bare "tootsies" at Hammerstein's vaudeville house.

The lady in question is Countess Thamara de Swirsky, who has been spending the summer at Newport, teaching three society maids and matrons her classic dance.

At the vaudeville house the countess appears, robed like a statue of Tanagra. To the music of Gluck's "Orfeo," she advances strategically toward a Grand piano, where she slips on to the stool. With the advantage that comes from complete freedom from all drapery she puts her pink toes on the pedals and plays the familiar Rachmannoff prelude.

After this the orchestra plunges into the immortal waltz from "Die Fledermaus," and the dancer draped in dull colors, does some real dancing. In red draperies she moves to the "Pizzicato" of Dolibes and scatte autumn leaves over the stage to the music of Glazocenoff's barcarolle "Automme." Although there have been more entertaining dancers on the stage from a vaudeville standpoint, Mme. de Swirsky's show has great pictorial charm—and then she is a real live countess.

CAVES OF "ARABIAN NIGHTS" ARE RIVALED BY COLORADO'S CAVERNS

There is no one who has not thrilled responsive to the charms and beauties of the underground caverns so vividly described in the quaint pages of the "Arabian Nights." From the detail of Aladdin's wanderings in buried chambers of porphyry and alabaster to the adventures of Ali Baba in the tragic days of the Forty Thieves, this most enthralling of fiction's classics fairly teems with reference to subterranean passages and rooms. And there is a logical, vital reason for it. The story-tellers of old time knew just how much gripping interest there was to the human mind in Nature's own underground castles. They couldn't take each reader through the caverns, so they described them as best they could.

But for everyone who reads this, there is the opportunity to explore for himself, and with his own eyes to see every nook and cranny of one of the most wonderful caverns in the wide world The Cave of the Winds, with its 16 splendid chambers, lies practically at your doors. Each one of the rooms is an experience in itself. Widely varied geological formations ranging from snowy alabaster and glittering crystal to granite of darkest ebony delight the eye at every turn. Live stalagmites and stalactites are continuing their formation in many of the rooms. For years after the visitor will remember the enthralling beauty of the "Crystal Palace" and the wonderful formations of "Gypsum Alcove." Intelligent guides conduct every party through the entire cave, explaining and classifying the various geological structures and strata, while every foot of the way is brilliently lighted with electric searchlights.

The cave is but a short distance from Manitou, at the head of beautiful Williams canon, easily reached on foot or by carriage, and is open both day and night.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

The New York Dramatic Mirror of September 14 has a very interesting account of Maurice Maeterlink and his wife, Georgette Leblanc. Maeterlink is the author of "The Bluebird," which is shortly to be produced in this country, and Mme. Maeterlink, Georgette Leblanc, is an actress of unique distinction and merit.

William Gillette will open his season in repertoire in Rochester, October 12. He will appear in six of his past successes.

"Ysobel," Mascagni's new opera, in which Bessie Abott is to star this season, will have its premier at the New Theater, New York, November 14.

"The Gamblers," the latest drama by Charles Klein, author of "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Third Degree," will be poduced in Chicago tomorrow evening.

Max Figman will make a tour of the west this fall in "Mary Jane's Pa," "The Man on the Box," and a new play not yet produced.

Stella Hammerstein will appear this season in "Keeping Up Appearances," a new comedy by Butler Davenport.

Sarah Bernhardt continues to astonish Paris by her unusual activity and abundance of energetic spirits. She is not only rehearsing her entire repertoire which she will present in this country this season, but she is calling upon playwrights, noted authors and personally supervising the most insignificant details of her productions.

Laurence Irving and his wife, Mabel Hackney, are appearing in England in an adaptation for the stage of Dostoieffski's famous "Crime and Punishment." This novel itself is one of elemental emotions and at times is brutally frank, but compelling and intense throughout. It is said to have been considerably softened for stage production, but at the same time has been made into a strong drama.

It has been reported that the company formed to raise $20,000 to pay the mortgage on Clara Morris' home in Yonkers has succeeded. Miss Morris is still so ill that the emergency has been kept from her.

Charles Frohman has received word from W. Somerset Maugham that this well-known English playwright will arrive in New York, October 12. Maugham is author of "Lady Frederick," "Jack Straw," "Mrs. Dot" and "Smith."

William Norris will make a western tour in "My Cinderella Girl," which ran all summer at Chicago.

Irene Oshier, who last season appeared in one of the eastern companies of "The Third Degree" has been secured by Henry W. Savage for "Madam X."

Frederick Warde is now putting the finishing touches on his revival of Shakespeare's "Timon of Athens." Warde will make a transcontinental tour in this tragedy, and will probably appear in this city late next spring on his return from the coast.

Labyrinths of Science

By Edgar Lucien Larkin.

(Lowe Observatory, Mount Lowe, Cal.)

Copyright, 1910, by Star Company.

With the discovery and recent perfection of the new ultra-violet light microscope, and the companion apparatus, the micro-photographic camera, with rapidly moving sensitive films, it seems that the extreme limit of vision of the human eye has been reached. Inorganic and organic particles have been seen, and these so minute that objects visible in the most powerful old-style instruments are as huge chunks in comparison. An entire microscopic universe as wonderful as the sidereal universe, the stellar structure, has been revealed. This complexity actually exists; but exploration has scarcely commenced. Many microscopists must devote lifetimes to these studies; hundreds of thousands of minute photographs must be secured and classified, sizes, shapes and specific speeds of these excessively small bodies must be discovered, tabulated and arranged in catalogues and series. Within a hundred years, devoted to this research, the micro-universe may be partially understood. Laws of micro-movements may be detected and published in text books like those of the gigantic universe of suns and their concentric planets and moons.

A Micro-Mental Universe.—I cannot look into these minute moving and living deeps without instantly believing that they are mental every motion is controlled by mind. The longer I look at the amazing things the deeper is this conviction. This micro-universe is rooted and grounded in a mental base. Positively, and without hope of overthrow, this assertion is made the flying particles know where to go. Several times I have printed in The American that wonder, the Brownian motions. Coarse particles, those visible in old-time microscopes, when suspended in liquids, were observed to be in rapid motion, darting in all geometrical directions with high speed. But the ultra-microscope reveals moving trillions of far smaller bodies, and these rush on geometric lines and cut out angles with the most incredible speed, specific for each kind and type. The smaller the particles the greater their velocities. A true Brownian motion of a particle in a liquid is that it will move on a straight line, then turn abruptly, not on a curve, but an angle; then traverse another line and another sharp angle, and so on during all eternity, so far as is now known. The smallest particle visible in the highest power ultra-microscope moves with a greater speed than any larger. But this smallest mass is as a great building compared to a particle of street dust, when compared to an ultimate physical, the chemical atom. The inevitable conclusion is that if the powers of ultra-microscopes could be increased hundreds of thousands of times, original atoms would be revealed, and these in exceedingly rapid Brownian type of motion. The atomic universe would surpass the universe of larger flying particles in rapidity and complexity of motions in their incessant work of building molecules. And since particles geomitrize, arrange themselves into crystals and forms, taxing the resources of the highest mathematics to formulate, the inference is that the atoms in the particles also geomitrize.

OYSTERS GROW ON TREES

Former Kansas Citian Says It Is No Yarn, and That He Was Picked Them.

From the Los Angeles Express.

"Oysters grow on the trees in the Yaqui valley, as well as in Porto Rico," said Charles F. O'Brien.

"I was much interested in the recent stories from Porto Rico to the effect that oysters are found there growing on the trees, which, by the way, most people regard as a 'yarn.' It is a fact, but it is due to the tides and not to anything else.

"On Tobari bay, in the lower end of the Yaqui valley, there are miles of the finest oysters that can be found anywhere. These are in great beds in the estuaries leading from the bay. The mangrove trees, which are a stunted growth, grow right down to the water's edge. At high tide they are partially submerged. The young oysters fasten on to the branches at high tide and remain there until they mature. Thus, at low tide, one can really pick oysters off the trees.

"These oysters are much larger than what is known as the California oyster, and superior in flavor. The beds extend along Tobari bay for miles, and some live American will make a fortune there some day, shipping and canning these oysters.

"Few Americans realise the tremendous development that is in progress on the west coast of Mexico."

Marie Tempest will open her season in Philadelphia, October 3, in "A Thief of the Night," under the management of Charles Frohman.

BESSIE ABOTT PRIMA DONNA.

MASCAGNI AND HIS FAMILY

Fled she to her inmost bower, and there
Unclasped the wedded eagles of her belt,
The grim Earl's gift, but ever at a breath
She lingered, looking like a summer moon
And showered the rippled ringlets to her knee;
Unclad herself in haste, adown the stair
Stole on and, like a creeping sunbeam, slid
From pillar unto pillar until she reached
The gateway. There she found her palfrey trapped
In purple blazoned with armorial gold
When she rode forth, clothed on with chastity
The deep air listened round her, as she rode,
The little wide mouthed heads upon the spout
Had cunning eyes to see; the barking cur
Light horrors through her pulses; the blind walls
Were full of chinks and holes, and overhead
Fantastic gables, crowding, stared, but she
Not less through all bore up till last she saw
The white flowered elder thicket from the field
Gleam through the Gothic archways in the wall.
Then she rode back, clothed on with chastity.
* * * She gained
Her bower, whence reissuing, robed and crowned,
To meet her lord, she took the tax away
And built herself an everlasting name.

An expert on construction says that tires made from the same batch of rubber under identical conditions and used under exactly like circumstances do not by any means give like results For instance two real tires which conformed to the conditions named were put on a car and an observation made of their condition One of them lasted more than 7,000 miles the other blew up before 400 miles had been covered The tire makers do not pretend to explain this They lay it solely to the nature of the rubber

Complaint on the part of owners and users of automobiles painted in dark colors is widespread concerning the greening and discoloration of the varnish, thus destroying to a greater or less extent the natural attractiveness of the colors and combinations of colors employed. This is due, for the most part to the too close confinement of the automobile in an insufficiently lighted room A lack of light affects the varnish disastrously, and in greening and discoloring it the color over which it is used is likewise injured, if not rendered of no effect outright This emphasizes the need of a great amount of light—really the more the better—for the garage in order to preserve the original and native quality of the finish.

The tire repair outfit should include prepared patches of various sizes, sheet rubber, ditto backed with thin canvas, rubber solution solutioned canvas, French chalk, three-tire levers, two or three security bolts, with nuts, spare valve rubbers, an indelible ink pencil and a pair of scissors. In addition, one should carry spare tins of solution and French chalk. The tubular wrench is a very handy instrument for turning awkwardly-placed nuts. A 500-mile race for a purse of $25,000 is planned by the managers of the Indianapolis, Ind., motor speedway for May 24, 1911. The race, which will be known as the Indianapolis motor speedway 500-mile international sweepstakes, will be open only to cars with a record of 70 miles an hour or better.

One of the most interesting tourists that ever made the trip across the continent is John Wright, of Los Angeles and his two sons, who recently reached New York from Denver in a 40-horsepower car, after a circuitous journey of approximately 3,000 miles. Mr. Wright camped out along the roadside when the weather was not too boisterous. During the day the tent was rigged up over the tonneau somewhat after the style of old prairie schooners. Mr Wright is now on his way to his father's home in England, and will continue his run through Europe in the same car.

Interest in automobiling in Portland, Ore., is reflected by the decision of the Y. M. C. A. of that city to erect a garage for its automobile school. The sum of $3,000 has been set aside for that purpose by the directors of the institution. During the last year 94 young men have registered in that department of the school.

Park Commissioner Stover of New York city has had all the principal roadways in Central park overhauled and resurfaced. Part of the time during the progress of the work it was necessary to close the main entrance of the park, but, owing to the use of the gasoline-propelled road roller, this lasted but a few weeks.

Members of automobile clubs in Massachusetts and Connecticut are arranging for a big celebration to be held today (September 24), to celebrate the formal opening of the new road into the Berkshires around "Jacob's Ladder." The movement was started by the Springfield Automobile club, and was given hearty support by other motoring bodies in the New England states.

A new state automobile law became effective in Georgia this month, but the number plates were not ready for distribution. In order to get around this, the secretary of state ruled that when a car owner filed his application papers and deposited the necessary fee he had complied with the law. All the owner then had to do was to sit back and wait for the state to furnish the number plates.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Health Talks

No man is stronger than his stomach. Make your stomach strong and you thereby fortify your system against the attacks of a long list of diseases which originate in the stomach and must be reached, if at all through the stomach. Thus torpid, or lazy liver, biliousness, dyspepsia, impure blood and various skin affections originate in weak stomach and consequent poor nutrition. The same is true of certain bronchial, throat and lung affections.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

THE DEATH OF MONTGOMERY

WHEN Napoleon was at the height of his glory, five years before Waterloo, there arrived in Paris a man of 54, who was a wanderer over the face of the earth. The day he reached the French capital Fouche, chief of the secret service of the Great Emperor put detectives on his trail. Night and day for the 17 months the wanderer remained in Paris they watched him. Every call he made, every visit he received, was reported. Had he been one of the most dangrous of men he could not have been subjected to a more rigid scrutiny. Every letter he wrote and every letter addressed to him was read by the police. He could go nowhere without being shadowed. Many times in those 17 months the wanderer went hungry. He longed to return to America, the land of his birth, but he was not welcomed in the United States and as regularly as he applied for a passport just so regularly was his application ignored. The man was Aaron Burr, who had been attorney general of the state of New York, United States senator and vice president. In the war for independence he had played a gallant part. In the attack on Quebec he had behaved magnificently. Side by side he and Montgomery had climbed the heights, and when Montgomery died he had carried the general's body back to the American lines. For a few months he had been military secretary to George Washington, but lost favor with the commander-in-chief and was succeeded by Alexander Hamilton.

After the war he and Hamilton had been rivals in politics, rivals at the bar and rivals in love. Hamilton had become the master spirit of the Federalist party and Burr had become the master politician of the anti-Federalists. Bitterly, almost venomously, these two fought each other while on the surface they maintained a pretense of personal good will if not friendship. But for Hamilton Burr might have been president instead of vice president. But for Burr Hamilton's ill advised letter to his friends attacking President John Adams might not have been made public. The publication of that letter brought confusion and defeat to the Federalists and disaster to Hamilton's political plans. He had power enough, however, to thwart Burr when Burr smarting under the slights of Jefferson, sought vindication by election as governor of New York. The vice presidency, in those days, was considered far below the governorship of New York in importance if not in dignity. The crushing defeat Burr received in the gubernatorial election meant political eclipse for him. He still retained the empty honor of the vice presidency, but his prestige was gone. Next came the duel. No doubt Burr was eager for some excuse to challenge Hamilton. It came when Hamilton refused to confirm or repudiate an attack on Burr's character which one of Hamilton's supporters made and credited to Hamilton.

Both Duelists

Dueling was a practice of the day. Duels between political lieutenants of Burr and Hamilton were common. Hamilton's eldest son had been killed in a duel by one of Burr's followers. Hamilton himself had served as second in one or two engagements and had sought a duel with James Madison. Burr was a firm believer in the code duello, and had the reputation of being one of the best shots of his time.

They met and Hamilton died. But with revenge came ruin. Hamilton dead was more beloved than Hamilton living. No duel ever fought on American soil aroused more feeling. Burr, who at first could see no wrong in the slaying of Hamilton, was astounded at the storm of indignation that arose. For a time he remained in seclusion at his home at Richmond Hill, expecting the popular outburst to subside, but when he was indicted for murder he sought safety in flight. Secretly at night he left his home, and hurrying to the nearby Hudson, he boarded a boat and was taken to Commodore Truxton's place at Perth Amboy. There he was secure for a few days only, for an indictment for murder was found against him in New Jersey also. Once more he had to move on. In Philadelphia he tarried a week, but, not relishing the commotion his appearance on the street created, he went south. There his reception was more cordial. In South Carolina he visited his daughter who was the wife of Governor Alston. In December five months after the killing of Hamilton he was in Washington, and resumed his duties as vice president. He presided at the famous trial by the senate of Judge Chase of Maryland—he who did not dare to venture within the limits of either New Jersey or New York. The day the trial ended Burr's term of office expired. Of his conduct at this trial much has been said in praise. "He presided," one senator declared, "with the dignity and impartiality of an angel, but with the rigor of a demon."

When the trial was over Burr arose and took leave of the senate. Of what he said there is no record. Most of the senators were opposed to him, but when he closed nearly every man in the senate chamber was weeping.

On the other side of the Atlantic a man of destiny had thrown Europe in convulsions and had crowned himself Emperor of France. Maybe the example of Napoleon had stirred the ambition of Aaron Burr. Intensely proud, intensely vain and given to consider himself as a great soldier and a great statesman, he saw, or thought he saw, in the far Southwest an opportunity to carve out for himself a career of conquest and glory. He had a vision of creating in Mexico and in Texas a republic or an empire of which he would be the head. Spain was weak and crumbling. Its hold on its possessions in North America was slight. England, jealous of the growth of the United States and fearful of the extension of the republic, was not averse to seeing an empire in the west. There is reason to believe that Burr, who put his ideas before the British minister to the United States, got encouragement if not assurance of support. There is no doubt that many men prominent in American affairs entered heartily into his schemes. It was an age of adventure and of conquest. Burr was an adventurer who believed in himself as destined to be conqueror. Everything he owned in the way of real estate he sold to finance his project. Then he borrowed right and left. Texas and Mexico and all the possessions of Spain beyond the Mississippi were ripe for revolt, he was led to believe.

Wilkerson's Treachery.

He had no doubt of his ability to enlist beyond the Alleghanies enough riflemen to make up an army sufficiently strong to overcome the small force Spain had in the territory he meant to invade. Of his own ability of his genius as a soldier he had no qualms. Calmly quietly and with as much secrecy as possible he went about his work. First he made a trip to the west. From Pittsburg he sailed down the Ohio. In Kentucky and Tennessee he got assurances of hearty support. Spain had aroused the enmity of all the west by its arbitrary efforts to control the Mississippi and "close that mighty stream to American commerce." At Blennerhasset Island he enlisted Harman Blennerhasset in his project. Blennerhasset had fled from Europe to escape imprisonment and on an island in the Ohio river had established a home and plantation that were considered magnificent at that time.

From the Ohio Burr proceeded to the Mississippi and down that stream to New Orleans. Small of stature—being less than five feet six—and slender of frame—weighing only 125 or 130 pounds—he nevertheless impressed all grades of men. He was a born leader. Exquisite in dress and soft of voice, he looked more like a dandy than an empire maker, but there was something about his eyes that was wonderful. They were very dark and brilliant. Men never considered him small once they looked into those eyes.

General Wilkinson, who had served with Burr in the War of the Revolution, was in command of the United States forces in the southwest. There was little doubt that he came under the influence of Burr and promised to render every possible aid in the furtherance of Burr's plans.

With recruits ready in the west and with the general in command of the United States troops in the southwest not only complacent but willing to join the expedition, the time seemed ripe for Burr to act. Back to the east he hurried to gather his supplies and strengthen his financial relations, and then he would be ready. In New York some of the richest of citizens—among them the Ogdens, DuPuysters and Willets—were subscribers to the war chest, and at least two United States senators lent their financial and moral support to Burr.

Seven months Burr spent in Philadelphia perfecting his arrangements, and then, in August 1806 he started west again. But, also for his dreams of empire, Thomas Jefferson, president of the United States, hated Burr as he hated few men. Rumors of Burr's plans had reached him, but they were so vague and indefinite that he could take no action. Soon after Burr started on this second trip, however, there came to Jefferson from Wilkinson enough information to warrant the president to act.

Copies of cipher letters from Burr to Wilkinson and Wilkinson to Burr exposed the whole conspiracy. At Frankfort, Ky., Burr was arrested. There was a trial and Burr was acquitted. Clever lawyer that he was he had no difficulty in making the trial a farce. Then with less than 100 men he proceeded down the Ohio and entered the Mississippi. At Natchez he was rearrested but was released by the grand jury. His men, however, alarmed at the intervention of the federal authorities, began to desert. Burr seeing no hope of putting his project through and fearful of again being arrested, started to flee across Mississippi. In Alabama he was taken into custody by Captain, afterward Major General, Flournes and sent North.

In June 1807 he was tried at Richmond for treason. Chief Justice Marshall presided and some of the greatest lawyers in America were engaged in the case. Burr took personal charge of the defense and was acquitted.

Exile.

His great scheme a failure, his fortune gone and many of his friends bankrupt through him, he did not give up hope. There was no career open to him in the United States. He could not return to New York, for the murder indictment still hung over him. Nine men out of ten looked upon him with scorn and contempt. The brand of Cain was upon him, but still he was undaunted.

Assuming the name of Edwards, the maiden name of his mother who was a daughter of the renowned Jonathan Edwards, he sailed secretly for England believing that the British government would lend a willing ear to the Mexican project. It was in July, 1808, he arrived in London. Although an outcast in America he was received with warmth by some of the great men of England. Canning, Castlereagh, Mulgrave and others gave receptions in his honor. To them he was the "celebrated Colonel Burr." If he saw in these attentions any prospect of support by the government, his hopes soon were shattered. Napoleon had placed his brother Joseph on the throne of Spain and England the hereditary enemy of Spain, naturally swung around and became the champion and ally of that country.

The diary of Burr shows that his purse was lean but his courage strong in those days. Never did he give up in despair. Once he had but twopence left. Philosophically he wrote that he was lucky in having twopence, and not being reduced to one penny, for with twopence he could hear the jingle of the coins, whereas with one penny he could not have that satisfaction.

A loan put him in funds temporarily and he went to Scotland. He and Sir Walter Scott became ardent friends, and when he returned to London Charles and Mary Lamb and Mary Wollstonecraft were among those who entertained him. But now a new trouble developed to harass him. He was notified by Lord Hawesbury that he must leave England.

"By what authority do you order it?" asked Burr.

"Under the Alien act," was the reply.

Then Burr did a thing that was ignoble.

"I believe," he said, "the contention of the British government is that once an Englishman always an Englishman."

"That is so," was the acknowledgement.

"Then," said Burr, "I am English. I was born in New Jersey when that was an English province. If once an Englishman always an Englishman holds good the fact that the colonies revolted does not change my status and your Alien act does not apply to me."

His Lordship agreed with him.

It was only a respite, however. In a few months he was arrested. This time Lord Liverpool was the moving spirit. Again Burr protested, but His Lordship was not to be swayed.

Your presence is an embarrassment to the government and you must depart," he said.

A Wanderer.

Burr went to Sweden. From there after a stay of five months, he journeyed to Denmark. From Denmark he went to Germany. At Weimer he met Goethe. In some places he was welcome, but in others he was not. He had no money, except the little he was able to get from America through his daughter or from former clients who owed small sums to him. From Germany he went to Paris and there he had the most poverty-stricken days of his life. In all his wanderings and in all his hardships he had one companion. Wherever he went he took with him an oil painting of the one woman he loved—his daughter. This he placed in the position of honor whether he lived in a fine house or in a garret. Some of the most beautiful things he wrote in his long life are about the joy this portrait of his beloved child brought to him in those days.

One streak of good luck came to him in Paris. An American named Griswold, whom Burr had befriended years before, not only insisted upon aiding him financially, but induced him to enter on a little speculation that netted him 2,000 francs. Then the long-delayed passport was furnished to him and he prepared to return to America. The clouds of war were gathering. He knew another conflict between the United States and Great Britain was imminent.

He hoped for an opportunity to rehabilitate himself by offering his sword to his country. One day in 1811 he sailed, happy, hopeful and more at peace with the world than he had been for seven years. But fate was not finished with its buffetings. The ship was captured by an English frigate and Burr, who had given all his money to get the ship away from port, was landed in England penniless.

For five months he lived on money he realized from the sale of some of his books. Then he managed to engage passage on the ship Aurora sailing from Gravesend. When he got to Gravesend the Aurora had sailed—was actually sailing out at the time—but he induced boatmen to row him out to sea in an effort to overtake the ship. Hour after hour they rowed. Twenty-odd miles from shore they overtook the Aurora and Burr went aboard.

Back in New York.

He landed in Boston without a dollar. The last of his precious books were sold to Harvard university for enought to get him to New York, and one day in June, 1812, he arrived in the city from which he had fled eight years before. No effort was made to prosecute him for the killing of Hamilton. No chance came to him to get a command in the army, so he resumed the practice of law. In the first case in which he appeared it was planned by those who detested him to hiss him and drown his voice when he arose to speak. But when he arose and looked with those wonderful eyes upon the hostile crowd not one of those who had come to hiss uttered a sound.

Business came to him in abundance and it seemed the skies were brightening for Aaron Burr, but it was not to be. From the south his daughter sailed to meet the father. Her son, whom Burr had dreamed of succeeding him as Emperor of Mexico, had died and she was broken hearted over her loss. Day after day Burr went to the Battery to watch for the ship that was bringing his daughter to him. Week followed week and month followed month. Never was the ship heard from.

The man who had withstood every other blow with fortitude was almost crushed by this one. For a long time he went into retirement. Then he returned to his work, beginning anew at 56. For 24 years he practiced at the bar and for those 24 years he had his hand in politics, but never openly. Enemies he had without number. Never did he appear in public that reproachful eyes were not turned upon him. He went his way, seemingly unconcerned but bitter at heart. Many stories are told of his gallantries with women before he killed Hamilton. Many others are told of his affairs after his return to America. He married Mme. Jumel when he was 78 and they separated within a few months.

Remarkable man. When he was stricken with paralysis it was a woman—almost a stranger—who took him in and cared for him until he died.

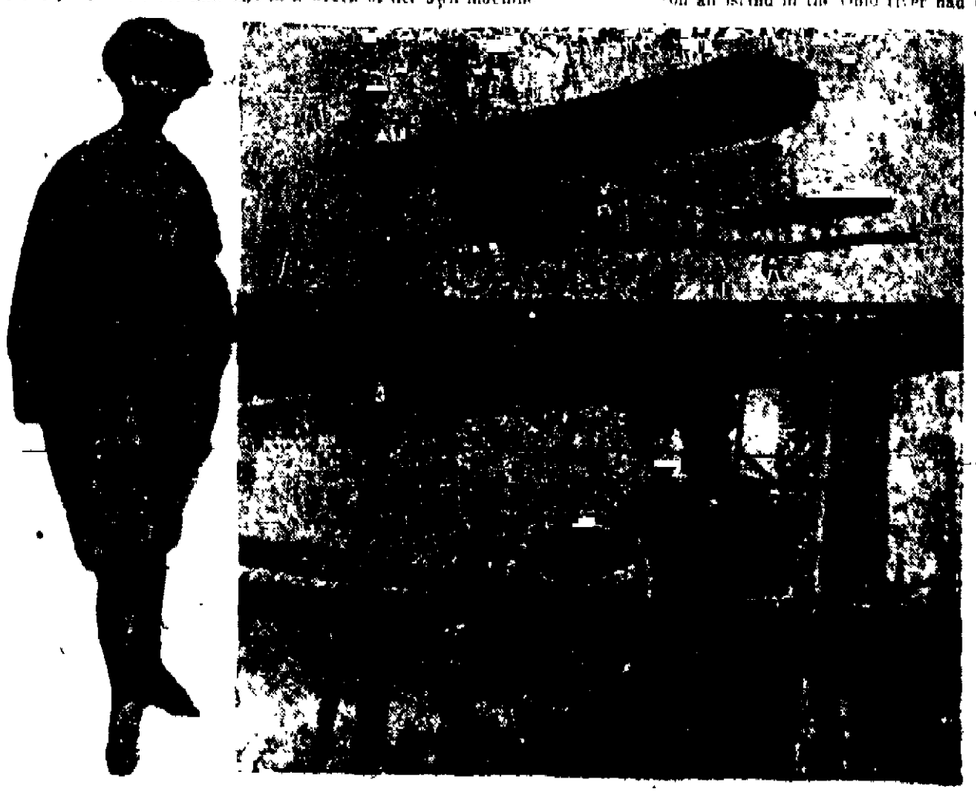

At Princeton college where he was educated and where his father was president and his grandfather, too, they laid his body to rest when he died.

Veterans of the Revolutionary war fired a salute over his grave. Today the spot where his dust remains is marked by a simple marble monument on which is inscribed

Nashville, Tenn., is now oiling all new streets that are built and all old ones that are repaved, expecting in this way to ultimately get most of the streets of the city oiled, excepting uptown paved streets. Rock is abundant at Nashville and all of the streets are well built, but unfortunately the rock is soft limestone, wears rapidly and make a tremendous amount of fine dust, so much so that it is necessary to sprinkle all of the streets of the city daily.

Approaching the famous belfry she soared to 1,200 feet and swung gracefully around the spire. She used a monoplane designed by Santos-Dumont. REPUBLICANS MAKE GAIN IN PORTUGAL

Revolt, Which Threatens, Would Almost Certainly Result in Establishment of a Republic—King Manuel Lends Ear to the Conservatives and Jeopardizes His Throne if Not His Life.

By FREDERICK WERNER.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—To those who know that we here in Germany, in spite of all apparent order and discipline are living on a political volcano, there is nothing more interesting than to watch the political events in the smaller states, and among these particularly the little kingdom of Portugal, where the great struggle between socialism and conservatism that is bound to break out some time, is already going on.

The political situation in Portugal is indeed exceedingly interesting. The results of the recent elections have placed the Portuguese government in a very difficult position. The cabinet of Teixeira Souza, which has tried to carry on a liberal, and in many ways almost radical, policy, will have only an exceedingly small and absolutely unreliable majority, and will be exposed to violent attack from radicals and republicans as well as from conservatives. The republicans have returned from the elections twice as strong as before. True enough, they only hold 15 or 16 seats, and as the number of deputies in the chamber is 155, their power might at first glance seem rather insignificant, but they represent the great majority of voters in Lisbon and the big towns and many of their followers hold important positions in the army and navy, and should an uprising come, they will not hesitate in siding with the republicans to such an extent that a republic would be the almost certain outcome of the conflict.

Conservatives Furious.

The conservatives are furious at the government because it allowed the election to go on and merely maintained order instead of intimidating the republican voters and stealing the seats of their candidates, as any good, conservative government would have done. Now they are clamoring for a conservative cabinet or a military dictatorship, which would immediately dissolve the chamber and order new elections, which would then be manipulated in such a way as to secure a strong conservative majority in the new chamber.

I am told that King Manuel is lending a willing ear to the conservative element, but if he follows their advice it will undoubtedly cost him his crown, if not his life.

The present prime minister is, on the other side, said to be determined to follow the example of his colleague, Canalejas, in Spain, and will inaugurate an anticlerical policy, which will bring him the hearty support of the republicans, and which may yet save the throne for his young king.

BOLD ACT THAT MADE A KINGDOM

By FREDERICH WEINER.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—When King Ferdinand recently returned from the celebrations at Cettinje in Montenegro, he went out of his way to visit Bosnia and Serajevo, and the newspapers of Austria were not slow to point out that Bosnia and Serajevo mean as much to the Bulgarian ruler as they do to their country.

The Crown Prince Boris accompanied the king, and as they both stood on the heights above Serajevo and looked down at the splendid view stretched out beneath them, it is not inconceivable to imagine the king telling Prince Boris that if the Emperor of Austria had not decided to annex Bosnia and the two they saw at their feet, his father would never have been king of Bulgaria.

For it was Ferdinand's early knowledge that the annexation of Bosnia had been decided upon that led him to announce the independence of Bulgaria and so secure his coronation at Tirnova as czar. He was emboldened to take the step because he knew that the armies of Austria-Hungary would have to protect his action.

The incident is one of the most instructive in modern history as showing how a favorable moment can be seized and turned to account by a bold and determined man.

Prince Ludwig of Bavaria, heir to the throne, whose strong speech in support of the Catholic faith has attracted considerable attention.

TIGER HUNTING WITH A CAMERA IS PLAN

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—Tiger hunting with a camera is the object with which Explorer C. G. Schillings is starting shortly for India. He is a mighty nimrod-photographer who has made a great reputation by his series of short range snapshots of lions, elephants and other wild beasts taken in their native jungle. He has had some marvelous adventures and hair-breadth escapes while carrying out his dangerous work. Herr Schillings has published an absorbing book entitled "With Flashlight and Rifle." He was one of the men Colonel Roosevelt was anxious to meet on his recent visit to Berlin.

PLOUGHING UP PARIS STREETS

By GEORGE DUFRESNE.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—Our municipal authorities have much to answer for. These seven or eight years past they have torn up Paris streets until their condition has become a byword in Europe. The Place de l'Opera is now worse than ever. Every day or two fresh chasms are dug, and steam cranes ply their loads. Stones are piled up, roads and pavements are impassable, and foreign tourists look on in amazement. The municipality apparently takes a delight in flouting public opinion, and at every fresh protest a new hole is bored.

Tradesmen, blocked in their stores by excavations for year after year, are literally going mad. An express from Le Treport-by-the-Sea to Paris was stopped the other night by a passenger pulling the communication cord. When the guard came, he said: "I am Fallieres. I request the immediate presence of the minister of public works, that he may report upon the state of the Paris streets. If he can't clear himself, I condemn him to death." On arrival at Paris, the poor man suddenly became violent, and a straightjacket had to be put on him before he could be conveyed to an asylum.

The madman proved to be a shopkeeper whose shop has been cut off from all communication with the outside world for eight years, because his street has been up for that time. He brought action after action at law, claiming $20,000 damages, and the suits, of course still pending, eventually drove him out of his wits. He was sent to the seaside in care of keepers, but escaped from them to come to Paris.

Meanwhile, Paris may be disgraced, and Parisians driven mad, by the state of the Paris streets, but the municipality imperturbably continues its wrecking work. As I write I can see yet one more huge hole being dug in the Place de l'Opera.

MOTHER GRUNDY THE CAUSE OF TERRIBLE CASE OF UXORCIDE

PARIS, Sept. 24.—A horrible vitriol tragedy has been enacted in one of the popular quarters of Paris, where a working man bound and tied his wife to a bedstead and then poured a big bottle of vitriol over her and practically burnt her to death. The couple had two small children and lived happily together for some years, but latterly the husband acted strangely. Without any reason whatever, he accused his wife of misconduct and frequently threatened her. Yesterday he was more unreasonable and excitable than ever, and after a scene with his wife he took the children away and placed them with neighbors. Then, returning to his rooms, he seized his wife and tied her to the bed, and, whilst she screamed and called for help, he poured a whole litre of sulphuric acid over her head, face and body. He then rushed out of the house like a mad man.

When the neighbors entered the room the woman was found in a dying condition. All the skin from her head and parts of her body came off, and she was one mass of swollen flesh. She was taken to a hospital, but there is little hope of saving her life. The husband was taken into custody during the night, and he says that he did the deed in a paroxysm of rage, when he did not know what he was doing. The wife of another man, he said, had for days been telling him that his wife was misconducting herself. There was no truth whatever in this story, as the unfortunate woman was most exemplary in her conduct.

SON OF DUSKY KING DEMANDS RESTITUTION

By GEORGE DUFRESNE.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—Prince Ibraham Dinah Salifou, who is agitating to secure the heritage of his late father, king of the Nalous and the Bagas, has found a champion in M. Paul Deschanel. The young man is at present earning $30 a month in a colonial bank.

The claim he has put forward recalls the visit of his father to the capital during the exhibition in 1889. The dusky monarch was received by President Carnot, who gave a dinner in his honor. The king was the hero of the hour. Columns were written about him, and his portrait, and that of his son Ibraham, then 10 years of age, appeared in all the illustrated papers.

When the king returned to his own country he found trouble brewing. He was invited to a conference on board a French ship. The vessel bore him to the place of exile prepared for him. His fallen majesty died in Senegal in 1897 in abject misery. A very small pension had been accorded to him. His lands were confiscated and let by the government of Guinea, which collected the rents.

His son, when he became a man, protested against this injustice. He has not ceased to protest. He claims that his father was jockeyed out of his pension and his property, and that the French government should make reparation. His case has been taken up by several influential persons who remember his father's loyalty to France. The government of French Western Africa thought that the matter could be adjusted by offering the prince $300. But the prince declined the proposed gift.

It is not a gift he wants, he claims his heritage. He is urged by M. Paul Deschanel to persevere in his refusal. From time to time he calls on the colonial minister and presents his case. He is urged to have patience and informed that his case is being inquired into. But the inquiry seems to be stationary. It is even suggested that the case is not being investigated at all.

In the past France has been very generous towards the black sovereigns whose reigns have come to an end through her colonial expansion. There is no apparent reason why an exception should be made in the case of Prince Ibraham D'nah Salifou.

PRINCE VICTOR NAPOLEON SOON TO WED DAUGHTER OF LEOPOLD

By PHILLIP EVERETT.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—Farnborough, [illegible] Surrey, is to witness a royal wedding next month, the contracting parties being Princess Clementine of Belgium, a daughter of the late King Leopold, and Prince Victor Napoleon, the claimant to the throne of France. [illegible] Farnborough [illegible] Eugenie is spend[illegible] and it is at her special request that the wedding is to take place there, since she has always been considerably interested in the [illegible] Prince Victor.

[illegible] King of the Belgians in giving his consent to the wedding has made it an express condition that no more Bonapartist [illegible] to be published [illegible] and that the [illegible] Belgium.

There was some thought of coming to live in this country, but for the present they will take up their residence in Italy, where an estate on the outskirts of Turin has recently been bought for them.

It is well known in every capital of Europe that Prince Victor Napoleon already has a morganatic wife, by whom he has at least three children. He and the Princess Clementine have been secretly betrothed for something like six years, but the late king of the Belgians would never give his consent to the marriage. Owing to the court mourning the British royal family will not be represented, especially as King George has not the same interest in the Bonaparte family that the late king displayed on several occasions.

LONDON SCARED BY HOOLIGANS

YOUNG RUFFIANS GIVE POLICE TROUBLE.

Crimes Increasing and Authorities Can Not Handle Gangs That Infest City.

By PHILLIP EVERETT.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The police of London are getting seriously alarmed because the "hooligans" here, encouraged by the successes of their brethren, the "apaches," are beginning to manifest themselves in a very similar way to their French brothers.

This is not the first attempt these youthful desperadoes have made to terrorize the people of the world's greatest city.

Two years ago a serious attempt was made by the authorities to stamp out the gangs of roughs which systematically paraded the streets of the east end and southeastern districts, but within the last few months the police have found themselves confronted with a serious situation. An increasing number of cases has been reported recently in which members of the public and the police themselves have suffered seriously from the attacks of hooligans.

This week more than a dozen cases have occurred in the east end alone, mainly in Bethnal Green, Shoreditch and Hoxton. Police court procedure does not appear to have any effect. In some districts residents are complaining loudly that more police should be put on the streets.

The London hooligan works with method. He generally uses a stick or a belt with great effect. It is estimated there are more than two dozen hooligan gangs infesting the metropolis and defying the police at the present time. They roam the streets in detachments, and when sections of rival gangs meet, pitched battles sometimes result. The leaders of these gangs are known to the police, and they can generally ascertain when trouble is brewing. When knots of the lads are seen whispering together at street corners a raid or fight is almost sure to result. The following are some of the names by which these gangs are known: "The Forties," "Silver Hatchet," "Old Ford Boys," "The Hackney Bruisers," "New Girdle Gang," "The New Boys," "The Bethel Green Boys."

Hungarian Croesus Gives Millions for Philanthropic Use

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—A considerable sensation has been caused by the announcement that Mr. Eugene Kassoll, a Hungarian millionaire who died recently, has bequeathed the sum of $5,000,000 for the foundation of an institution at Buda Posth. He left his entire fortune for this purpose.

The institution in question is to be devoted to the support or assistance of those members of the middle classes who, through no fault of their own, have failed in business or have become incapacitated from work through ill health. It is understood that the relatives of the late Mr. Kassoll, who, of course, all expected to benefit under his will, have resolved to dispute the validity of the document, and to that end have already put the matter into the hands of their legal representatives.

UPSET CAPITALISTS, SOCIALISTIC SLOGAN

By GEORGE DUFRESNE.

PARIS, Sept. 24.—True to its promise, the Socialist federation of the Seine has covered the walls of the city with a manifesto which sets forth that, as the prices of the necessities of life are increasing, it is imperative that the people should enter their protest. The Socialists, it should be pointed out for the benefit of the free foodan traders in Britain, do not complain of the government's fiscal policy. They do not see that the higher prices are due to protection. You will find nothing about the need for free trade in this socialist manifesto.

It is their opinion that rents, wine, bread and meat are increasing in price through the manoeuvers of speculators, who are accused of gambling with the food of the people. But it would seem that it is not the speculators that the socialists [illegible] but it is the government and the [illegible]. "Since," concludes the manifesto, "it is the capitalist regime which desires things to go on like this, we invite the workers to rally to their trade [illegible] and to the socialist party and [illegible] with the object of upsetting the capitalists."

So [illegible] the General Confederation of Labor has not shown its hand in this agitation against the higher cost of [illegible] are about to be started throughout the country [illegible] the revolutionary organization will take possession of the movement, and make it the pretext of fomenting a general strike.

RUSSIA TAKES NO PRECAUTIONS TO WARD OFF DEADLY CHOLERA

By FREDERICK WERNER.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—The disgust and impatience felt at St. Petersburg and daily expressed in the newspapers, at the half-hearted and ineffectual attempts of the authorities to stamp out the cholera, have been considerably heightened today by the discovery that vessels loaded with grain from Odessa, where there is plague as well as cholera, are allowed to enter St. Petersburg without any medical inspection or sanitary precautions whatever. Such a vessel has been discharging Odessa grain on the quays of the Neva for several days past, having naturally brought with it some of the rats of Odessa, which are being officially exterminated as far as possible in the latter town in order to prevent the spread of the infection.

The sanitary regulations of the port of St. Petersburg appear to be those of the time of Peter the Great, 200 years ago, but without Peter the Great's genius and energy in dealing with emergencies. The Novoye Vremya disparagingly declares that the dead bureaucratic formalism, official carelessness, and the mediaeval habits of the uncultured population have entered into a conspiracy to sow Russia with the seeds of disease and destruction.

The highest Russian medical and sanitary authorities are beginning to express the most pessimistic views concerning the unhealthiness of Russia. One of them has just declared his belief that the cholera will be worse next year. Professor Veliaminoff also certifies to the failure of all measures against it as long as the insanitation of the towns and villages is not radically dealt with.

Out of 1,082 towns throughout the country, only 58 have any kind of drainage at all and only 192 are provided with a water supply. At Hughesofka, the great metallurgical center belonging to the English-New Russia company, 500 Turks have had to be engaged to take the places of Russian workmen, who have decamped in consequence of the cholera.

Significant Religious Talk by Prince Ludwig of Bavara

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—Prince Ludwig of Bavaria, son of the regent, and heir presumptive to the throne, has delivered a speech which has attracted great attention. Several of the prince's previous public utterances have created considerable political excitement, notably his declaration, when replying to a toast in St. Petersburg, that German princes are not vassals of the German emperor, but his confederates.

The occasion was the laying of the foundation stone of the new St. Anna church, at Altootting, a ceremony which took place on the day on which the emperor delivered his Königsberg speech, and, like the emperor, the prince accentuated his adherence to Christianity. "I thank the good God," began Prince Ludwig, "that I am descended from Roman Catholic parents, and was brought up in the Catholic faith." Continuing, the prince said, "The Roman Catholic religion permits every Catholic to be tolerant towards those who think differently. It is a mistake to assume that we Catholics may not hold in high esteem the convictions of people who think otherwise than we do. Therefore we demand that tolerance shall be exercised towards our convictions. We know very well that it is not the Mother of God in Heaven alone who fulfills or rejects our prayers, because she knows best whether the fulfillment of our requests is of advantage or not. Nevertheless, we hasten to the Holy Virgin, and address ourselves to her, confiding in her power with God. I, too, have sorrows and troubles, and I have laid them before the altar of the holy church. We are all witnesses of what has been attained here in the course of centuries by the intercession of the Holy Virgin, the Mother of God, and how the wishes of many heavily-burdened souls have been fulfilled."

This second declaration of firm adherence to Christianity, made by a member of the German ruling house, is especially significant at the time when such strenuous efforts are being made by the Socialist party to win over the youth of the country and to persuade them that Christian doctrines are based on myths and deceptions.

MESSAGES FROM DEAD RECEIVED BY SOCIETY

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The result of the late Professor William James' plan to test the theory that it is possible to communicate with the dead is awaited with great anxiety by the English students of psychical research. Sir Oliver Lodge regards it as a justifiable supposition that within the last few years a certain group of deceased persons have been trying to communicate with the members of the Physichical Research society.

Various messages have been received by the society—some by a medium speaking in undoubted trance, others by people working unconsciously, either in complete trance or in a condition of imperfect consciousness. Many of these messages are said to be intensely interesting, but none of them has presented an absolutely clear case of survival after death.

The Gulf Coast Country of Texas "The Garden Spot of the Nation"

OFFERS THE MOST IDEAL INVESTMENT FOR EITHER THE LARGE INVESTOR SEEKING A GOOD MONEY-MAKING PROPOSITION, OR THE HOMESEEKER OF SMALL MEANS WHO IS LOOKING FOR A HOME AND LIVELIHOOD.

We wish to impress upon you the fact that the Welder ranch that we are now marketing is not excelled in the United States in climate, location, or fertility of soil. This land will produce a net rental to purchaser to exceed rentals from lands in different agricultural states where land is now selling at prices ranging from $75 to $150 per acre. Our lands are selling from $25 to $50 per acre. Nowhere is there a greater variety of crops grown. We have perpetual summer with paying crops every month in the year.

The Geo. H. Paul Co., of Washington, Iowa, and the International Land and Investment Co., of Omaha, Nebraska, owners and sellers of this land, have reserved 7,000 acres which they will immediately put under cultivation. The equipment, consists of eleven sets of improvements, machinery and mules, to put this large body of land under cultivation. They expect to make this land worth as much in two years as the famous Taft farms, which now can not be bought for $150 per acre.

In the townsite of St. Paul our company is spending $50,000. In the past two years we have sold 125,000 acres of this rich agricultural land to the best business men in 10 or more states on either side of the Mississippi river. 75 per cent of our purchasers are actual settlers—a fact that should not be overlooked.

The above facts are proof that we have a proposition that you can not afford to not investigate. We are not asking the people of Colorado Springs to buy our town lots, 5, 10, and 20-acre tracts, or farm lands without first seeing our lands and thoroughly investigating lands and conditions there. We have a clean cut proposition that sells to the best business people. What we want is an early opportunity to talk with you and explain our proposition, and we stand ready to prove every assertion made. We will be pleased to have you accompany us on our first splendid excursion, October 4. The total expense of the 8 days' trip will not exceed $55.00.

The Sun Realty Co. needs no introduction to the people here. W. H. Howell, their assistant, will be pleased to give the best personal references.

COME IN AND LET US EXPLAIN THIS TO YOU.

MADAME NADJA

Your past, present and entire future and everything can be told by consulting this medium. Her predictions always correct and never fail to come true, as thousands of people will testify.

Does everything seem to go wrong and has fortune never smiled on you? Has your life been full of "ups and downs?" Do not despair, as you can yet learn the true road to success and happiness, as both await you if you only know how. When and where to find them will be revealed to you. You will also be told how to have your wants and wishes satisfied; how to obtain your heart's desire. How to live happy and contented the rest of your life and be fortunate. Tells what you have done and what you are doing now and what you are going to do. All told without asking a single question. Advice on all business changes, travels, mines, speculations, investments, love, divorce, marriage and all perplexing conditions of life. Your name and business is told, reunites the separated, settles lovers' quarrels, locates friends or relatives, about family troubles everything is told. There is nothing too intricate for her to unravel. Take no one's word, see for yourself and be convinced. She teaches palmistry, personal magnetism and develops mediums in all occult gifts.

Editor's note from one of the leading Salina papers: "Among the recent arrivals at the City hotel in Salina is Madame Nadja Marva, who came to this city after an extensive tour of the United States and Europe, during which she visited all of the largest cities. Madame Nadja is the clairvoyant, who during her visit to the London society of Psychic Research in the year of 1906, predicted that within two years of that date all England would be in mourning over the loss of her beloved ruler, King Edward. When seen by a reporter, Madame stated that in her opinion, Salina was destined to become the leading city of the middle west. She also expressed herself as being favorably impressed by the courtesy shown her since her arrival in this city."

BLACK HAWK TO HAVE NEW MILL IN TWO MONTHS

CENTRAL CITY, Colo., Sept. 24.—Another concentrating plant is to be erected in Black Hawk to treat custom ore, and construction has been started by the Denver Mining & Reduction company. The capacity of the plant is to be 100 tons daily, and it is expected to be in operation within two months.

A local pool of business men and miners having a lease and bond on the Mitchell mine, on Quartz hill, is operating under the name of the Mitchell Mining & Leasing company with a new shaft house and machinery, working two shifts and a good force. Drifting and stoping is in progress on a crevice three to four feet wide, which returns two and a half to three ounces gold per cord, with a good grade of tailings. The smelting ore averages a foot in width and brings $30 per ton. The company has leased the Randolph mill in Black Hawk, and the mill ore is there treated, 20 stamps dropping day and night.

One of the longest crosscut tunnels in Black Hawk is the National, which starts below Black Hawk and has been driven 3,300 feet, its heading being now close to the Clay county mine, in Lake district. It has tapped several veins.

The Coeur d'Alene mine, on Academy hill, overlooking this city, operated by Chicago parties, has been showing good bodies of ore in the lower drifts, and regular shipments are made of ore of average values. Since the Newhouse tunnel cut the veins in the west and drained that territory, good progress has been made in development.

Alfred Anderson has started his Casto mine, on Winnebago hill, and expects to soon sink the main shaft to open new ground. He has a 10-stamp mill and the ore can be hoisted and dumped into the hoppers of the mill. The mine has made heavy production and his prospects are good.

RICH FIND STARTS RUSH TO DISTRICT NEAR SEARCHLIGHT

SEARCHLIGHT, Nev., Sept. 24.—Not since the discovery of Hart, several years ago, has a strike caused greater local excitement than the one recently made at Kerwin camp, 20 miles south of Searchlight.

Wm. Kerwin, the discoverer, carefully guarded his find for some weeks. But a few days ago the news began to leak out and a few [?] ones hied themselves to the scene. A few days later the news became general and there followed a daily exodus. Autos, all manner of conveyances and animals were pressed into service, and a line of dust marked the road leading southward.

The scene of the new discovery is in the northern end of the Chiquita hills, a range some five miles in length, which rises up midway in the wide valley. It is two miles north of the old Chiquita mine and about four miles west of Juniper camp.

The rush started when several exceedingly rich free-gold specimens were brought to Searchlight. The ore is an iron-stained quartz and quite soft. Returning mining men tell of taking the ore, crushing it between the palms and finding particles of gold. There is one dump from which one can grab a handful of ore, throw it into a pan without mortaring, and never fail to secure many colors.

BIG CONSOLIDATION IN GEORGETOWN RUMOR

GEORGETOWN, Colo., Sept. 24.—A night crew has been put on the Vidler tunnel in East Argentine and it is proposed to operate machine drills day and night in future and make 12 to 14 feet daily.

A. J. Woodruff, president of the Argentine Central Railroad company, with three other parties, spent a day recently in the Vidler tunnel, and a report is current that consolidation of the Vidler and Waldorf holdings will soon perfected and the two properties come under one management.

This consolidation was undertaken about three years ago, when the Vidler property was in charge of Rees C. Vidler, but fell through. A big body of galena has been cut in the breast of the tunnel and assays run high in silver and lead with some gold.

The Wilcox mill, near the portal of the tunnel, is running one 12-hour shift. Shipments of concentrate and smelting ore average one carload daily. Much ore formerly put through the concentrator is being sent to smelters as it pays better.

MEXICANS FIND A BIG NUGGET

WICKENBURG, Ariz., Sept. 24.—A gold nugget weighing 29 pennyweights was picked-up by two Mexicans in the London range a few days ago. This is the same region where three Germans picked up a nugget weighing 3 ounces about a year and a half ago and a great number of smaller finds have been made. Theodore Phillips of the London Mountain and London Gulch Mining companies is conducting a systematic search for the original source of these floating specimens of virgin gold, and the Mexicans who made the latest pick-up were in his employ.

OPENS UP RICH ORE.

WALLACE, Idaho, Sept. 24.—The Surprise Mining company, owning property on Pine creek, is preparing to ship several carloads of ore. Eighteen tons of high grade carbonate ore have been hauled to the railroad recently. Some very rich ore was opened up in the mine recently and it is this which will be sent to the smelter.

The Craze for Ermine.

Lady Duff-Gordon.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

ERMINE, the royal, will be the fashionable fur in Paris and London this season. After an undeserved obscurity for a couple of years it has again come into its own. And such masses of it! It would seem as though having the desire for it dammed up so long has made it come into the fashion mart in greater quantities than ever. And it is so expensive!

But all the furs are bigger this season than usual, and so, of course, this had to be true of ermine. There are perfectly enormous stoles, of which the borders only are of ermine skin, while the central part will be of, perhaps, other furs or beautiful irridescent silks. I have seen stoles that are ten feet long—and this is not extreme.

Contrasts in black and white are very popular among the exclusive furriers. Here's a very astonishing outfit of ermine and black Russian sable. The ermine makes up the body of the great, almost cape shaped stole, while bands of the sable divide it between neck and sleeves and edge. The muff is enormous and carries out the same contrasting design. Tassels of velvet finish stole and muff. This is one of the really exclusive designs of the season, and I fancy that you have not seen anything like it as yet on your side of the water.

Even the hobble skirt has been reflected in the furs. I show you one dainty coat that makes the wearer look like a kind of little ermine herself.

The ermine runs around in a broad band all about the hem and bottom. There is a broad ermine collar. The coat itself is of delicate blue changeable silk. The great buttons and button holes wind curiously about so that when the garment is buttoned, one has a perfect hobble effect. It is very odd and very unusual, but I do not think that it will be very popular.

The New Sweeping Ermine Trimmed Stole with Centre of Padded Irridescent Green Silk

An Up-to-the-Minute Parisian Creation of Fox in the Prevailing Contrasting Mode.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous Lucile of London, and the foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion page for this newspaper, illustrating it with sketches and photographs of her models in her London or New York establishment or by exclusive photographs of the Parisian modes.

Lady Gordon's articles are always the first in this country to describe not only her own individual modes, but the advance styles of the great French dressmakers and the oddities as well. She was the first, through this newspaper, to give news of the hobble gown, the two story hat, the half-shell gown and other fashion freaks of the sort.

This week she sounds the advance note of the fashionable fur for the season, the royal ermine, and describes some wonderful creations of the Parisian furriers.

The body of this coat or exaggerated stole, is of silk—a combination shared by most of the new furs. Here it is of a delicate blue and harmonizes perfectly with the ermine.

The wrap at the right is of fox and heavy silk. It also shares the contrasting winding lines of the larger figure in the centre.

The muffs are very enormous, and in them the furrier has put, as he has in his wraps, coats, stoles, and so on, the oddest of contrasts. Some are covered with the daintiest of lace, with only the ends of fur. Some are made from old-fashioned brocades, with band after band of fur winding about their enormous barrel-like sides.

And then there are some of the daintiest little muffs imaginable that come with the costumes for the theatre and restaurant parties.

And these are really quite a novelty, although for the life of me I cannot see what their use is! They will be worn, like the little cap within the two-story hat, inside the bigger muff. When the large muffs are discarded the wearer [illegible] the little one to [illegible] or to her arm and carry it wherever she is to go. Inside of it are [illegible] toilet [illegible] powder [illegible] and so on. Our [illegible] restaurants [illegible] quite so [illegible] still I [illegible] they [illegible] enough to make them [illegible] novelty.

ZINC PROPERTY YEILDS HEADILY

GAMBETTA MINE WILL HAVE NEW PLANT.

First Activity in Georgetown District, New Additions to Shippers.

GEORGETOWN, Colo., Sept. 24.—Heavy shipments are in order from the Gambetta mine on Republican mountain. On an average, two cars of zinc are being shipped each month to the zinc smelter in Oklahoma. This ore is unusually clean, carrying from 50 to 55 per cent in zinc, it is said. It is being mined from the east drift on the Gambetta vein, intersected 1,000 feet from the portal of the Joplin tunnel, the ore vein being from 10 to 30 inches wide.

Just as soon as the Main electrolytical plant has been brought into commission the management of the Gambetta property will install a heavy plant of machinery. The lower adit on the Washington vein is to be driven for 1,200 feet to intersect the Gambetta vein at an increased depth of 220 feet under the present deepest workings. This will permit the ore to be more economically handled.

The Burleigh Mining and Milling company last week sent out a carload shipment of smelting ore from the [illegible] being operated on the Pelican level to the east of the Perude shaft. The ore is of high grade and probably will mill between 300 and 350 ounces in silver to the ton.

This lease is among the good paying propositions to be found in the Upper Clear Creek district. The ore body is from five to seven feet wide, the ground having been opened on the [illegible] drift for more than 100 feet. Stoping is in progress, and from this time forward heavy shipments will be in order.

During the last week about 20 tons of [illegible] concentrates have been sold at the local smelter. The material is the highest grade that is received at the sampler, milling from 80 to [illegible] ounces in silver and from 50 to 56 per cent in lead, according to reports.

High Saving Effective.

The big mill is doing excellent service and a high saving of values is being effected. The machinery is now running on one 20-hour shift, but at an early date it is stated another shift will be employed.

Shipments have been started from the Scotia mill being operated by Frank Graham. Last week several [illegible] of iron, zinc and lead were sold to the Chamberlain-Dillingham sampler in Georgetown. The lead carried [illegible] per cent in that metal, with 4[illegible] [illegible] in silver to the ton. The zinc [illegible] 40 per cent in that metal, the [illegible] values not being paid for.

This mill is being fed upon material from the Burleigh tunnel dump. There are said to be thousands of tons available, so there promises to be a steady run of machinery.

[illegible] & Co., leasing on the Commonwealth vein through the Victoria tunnel, expect to start shipments of [illegible] smelting and concentrating ore [at an] early date. Arrangements have been made with Stephens Bros. & Old, [owners] of the Mendota mill, where [the lea]d-zinc ore will receive treatment. These lessees have a streak of [ore ex]posed in the drift that is said [to be] from eight to 12 inches wide. [The g]round is being placed in condition preparatory to stoping it. It is believed that the zinc shortly will [appe]ar, permitting the sale of the [ore as] a smelting product.

BIG CRIPPLE CREEK PROPERTIES ACTIVE

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 24.—This month the daily production for the properties of the Trilby Mining company on Bull hill, made by the company and lessees, will total 30 tons a day, while the average value of the ore will hold at about one ounce gold to the ton. The company is carrying on development work, and the lessees, Olsen and Van Tilborg, are responsible for the tonnage made. The lessees are mining ore from what is known as the "Big Cave," a stope 150 feet wide and about 153 feet in length. The ore, made by the junction of dykes and veins, is an oxidized product and ships at about $12 to $18 a ton in carload lots. Occasionally richer pockets enhance the value, but the shipments are classed as milling grade ore.

The 25 sets of lessees on the properties of the United Gold Mines company are making fair production, and are shipping not less than 500 tons a week to the Golden Cycle mill at Colorado City. Lessees on the Ironclad hill mines, the W. P. H., Montrose, and Damon group have been confining recent development to a search for new ore bodies, and their output has necessarily been light. The Wild Horse, Silver Tip and Deadwood lessees have produced the tonnage, and the mill at the Wild Horse is kept in operation on the low grade ore bodies developed in the search for the more profitable ore shoots.

September should record banner production from the Cresson mine. A string of cars is maintained at the Cresson loading station in Eclipse gulch, and the aerial tram from the mine to the railroad is idle only at night. Three thousand tons of ore may be considered a conservative estimate for the month, with the average value about one ounce gold to the ton.

VALUABLE FIND IN ABANDONED TUNNEL

IDAHO SPRINGS, Sept. 24.—The strike in the Bride vein, in the old Idaho tunnel, in Virginia canon, when four feet of pay ore was exposed in a lateral abandoned by former operators, is improving. The vein at the heading of the drift is now five feet wide and the solid smelting streak 26 inches wide. The old ore bins and plats at the mouth of the Idaho tunnel are being filled and 15 wagon loads have been hauled to the Newton mill for concentration. The find is one of the greatest made in the district in recent years, and adds another to the list of shipping mines.

The heading of the Lucania tunnel, on Fall river, has encountered a vein carrying lead, zinc, gray copper and iron, giving assays of 22 ounces gold and 118 ounces silver a ton, with 7.10 per cent lead and 3.6 per cent copper, a gross value of over $18 a ton.

BRIGHT DIAMOND AT OURAY YEILDS WELL

OURAY, Sept. 24.—Already 225 tons of ore have been taken out of the "cave" or "vug" hole that was broken into in the Bright Diamond quartzite about a month ago. The net smelter returns show $100 per ton gold, making $22,500 found in this one vug.

About two weeks ago a similar vug was encountered in the Ironclad, an adjoining claim.

The output for July for the Camp Bird was the largest of any one month in its history, being 6,818 tons of ore, yielding 9,985 ounces gold and 824 tons of concentrates.

The net profit for the month was $187,362, an average of about $27 per ton for the ore treated.

SEEK ZINC ORE IN LAKE MINES

OLD LEADVILLE DUMPS RAKED OVER.

Ore Teams Remindful of Bonanza Days New Discoveries of Importance.

LEADVILLE, Colo., Sept. 24.—The hunt for carbonate of zinc continues vigorously throughout the district, and a large force of men is at present employed in raking over the old dumps in the neighborhood where the remarkable discoveries have been made. A number of old shafts on Fryer, Yankee and Carbonate hills are being prospected, as well as several on Iron and Rock hills.

Early in the summer Frank Zaitz and associates secured a lease on the Robert Emmet, Stray Horse gulch, at one time a large producer, and after spending considerable money in retimbering the shaft and drifts and cleaning out the latter, work was directed to find the ore bodies which were believed to exist in the property. In the drifts several streaks of zinc ore were found and they were persistently followed until the main body was reached, and later it turned out that not one but several ore bodies of zinc sulphides were opened. Through the bodies are numerous streaks of high-grade material which are saved separately. As the ore bodies are developed the tonnage increases, and today the mine is said to be sending out 2,000 tons a month. As there is no railroad switch to the mine, all of the ore is hauled by wagon to the cars at the railroad depots, and the string of ore teams that are daily seen going up and down East Sixth street reminds one of the olden days when all of the ore in the camp was hauled by wagon. The largest bodies of zinc sulphide are found in the lower workings of the mine.

New Discoveries.

For several weeks lately Manager Stewart of the St. Louis has been directing his attention to the finding of a low-grade ore body that he thought should be within the lines of the property, and last week was successful in tapping it. So far it is a good-sized body and of sufficient value to make it profitable mining. The ore carries gold, with but little silver.

Report comes from Lackawanna gulch that a body of sulphide ore four feet wide has been opened in the Theodolite claim. The ore, according to the assays, runs into the three figures, with the principal values in gold, and a good percentage of lead. The claim is being worked by a tunnel.

After being closed down for several weeks on account of bad air, the mines on Carbonate hill so affected have again resumed work, as the cold nights lately have cleared the mines of all foulness. Among those to resume are the Yankee Doodle and Little Giant.

Extensive development work is going on in the Evelyn, Excelsior and Catalpa, Carbonate hill, and 40 tons daily of a good grade of iron is being sent to the smelter.

The new shaft on the Clear Grit group, Iowa gulch, is now down 160 feet, and is being pushed as rapidly as possible by three shifts.

The Sugar Loaf Consolidated tunnel is now in 2,400 feet and the objective point will soon be reached.

JERRY JOHNSON ORE IMPROVING

VALUES IN NEW VEIN SHOW INCREASE.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 24.—The new ore body recently opened in the lower workings of the Jerry Johnson property, on Ironclad hill, is reported improving as development work is carried on, and values carried therein are also on the increase. Assays taken this morning gave returns of from $21 to $34 gold to the ton, with the ore tested being broken all the way across the vein. The ore body still shows an enormous width, and has continued strong to a length of 82 feet. Two other shoots are at present under development in the Jerry, and the output at this time is averaging two cars a day. This production is to be doubled by Lessee Edwin Gaylord within a few days.

High Grade From Dante.

M. B. Rapp, operating on the Dante No. 2 property, on Bull hill, is preparing another shipment of high-grade which will probably go out next Tuesday morning. The ore being saved for this consignment carries values of from 19 to 31 ounces gold, and is coming from a rich seam lying near the center of the vein. The ore body proper, under development above the 500-foot, or tunnel, level, is of good size, and on either side of the high-grade streak returns in the neighborhood of $20 a ton. Several other sets of lessees are operating successfully on the Dante. Considerable development work on company account is in progress in the main or Dante No. 1 shaft.

$100 Ore From Strong.

Two cars of ore, which will probably go better than $100 a ton, were billed out today from the Strong property, on Battle mountain. The mineral was from the lower workings, and was broken from a five-foot vein under development on the 1,000-foot level. The output of the Strong is 40 cars a month, with the ore carrying values of from two and a half to 11 ounces gold to the ton.

Developing Gregory.

A large amount of development work is under way in the Gregory claim of the Elkton company, on Raven hill, and Gus Johnson and associates, lessees, have ore three feet wide on the 400-foot level. The vein exposed is said to be showing a slight improvement with values ranging from a half to two and a half ounces. The shaft will be sunk an additional 100 feet, and when the desired depth is reached, the lessees will drift with the view of tapping the extension of the ore shoot.

THE CRIPPLE CREEK TRIP

MONEY MARKET OF WORLD TIGHTENING

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The halting, uncertain tone of the speculation in stocks was unaltered today in the absence of any conclusive development to point to the course of events which are awaited. General evidence of the tightening of money markets was a feature, the influence being the preparation for the coming October settlements. In Berlin especially, these are always heavy, and the rise in the private discount rate to the level of the official rate of the Imperial Bank of Germany presages an early rise in that rate. The private rate in Paris also is hardening, and demands upon the Bank of England arouse discussion of a possible early advance in that rate. Today $2,250,000 was withdrawn from the English bank for shipment to Egypt.

The cotton bill dispute complicates the exchange situation and is responsible also for some extra demands from banks in the south for rediscounting in New York.

There was some movement today in stocks of minor railroad properties in reorganization, but the general list was inert. The loan expansion shown by the bank statement was expected in view of the rediscounting for southern banks, but the cash decrease was less than expected. The actual surplus is thus left $17,964,000. Bonds were firm. Total sales, par value, $1,042,500.

United States 2's have declined ¼ per cent in the bid price on call since last week.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—Cables lower; wheat prices about where they were a week ago, efforts of bulls have failed. Big world's shipments certain, lower prices probable. Several million bushels short corn covered on rallies past couple days. No indication of frost for the big corn states and we look for bear factors to rule the market. Oats will follow the leaders.

Grain Weather: Glenwood to Fortal, clear, 58; Winnipeg, cloudy, cold, 30; Bismarck, cloudy, calm, 55; Superior, cloudy, 55; Kansas City, cloudy.

HEAVY LIQUIDATION BY WHEAT HOLDERS

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—Alleged fear of Canadian competition, even with the import duty of 25 cents a bushel, was a new bugbear today for owners of wheat. Talk of such a possibility acted as a last straw, and there was much liquidation and an unusual amount of short selling accordingly. The close was at a net decline of ⅛ to ⅝c; corn showed a loss of ⅛ to ¼@⅜c at the finish, and oats ⅛c to ¼c. The end of trading left hog products all the way from 15c higher to 20c down.

Primary receipts of wheat were nearly 500,000 bushels more than last week. There was no export business, and milling call was poor. Large figures on world shipments seemed probable on Monday and Liverpool and Paris quotations came lower. Then, as if to add to the woes of the bulls, discussion developed as to what might be expected should greater foreign demand not arise for Canadian wheat.

Some little comfort was derived, however, from a belief that the visible supply total will fall short of a year ago, when there was an increase of 3,316,000 bushels in America. The fact was noticed, too, that northwest receipts this week were only 4,042 cars, against 7,626, the corresponding time 12 months previous. December ranged from 99⅞ to $1.00⅛@¼, finishing ⅛c net lower at 99⅞.

Short selling from influential sources weakened corn. December fluctuated between 51⅛ and 51⅝, and closed ⅛@¼ down, at 51⅛@¼. The cash demand was dull. No. 2 yellow closed 53½@¾.

COATS FOR WINTER WEATHER

THESE fetching garments, says Dame Fashion, are for street wear, the last word as to smartness. They are also most serviceable for all occasions when a top coat is necessary. Pictured here are two attractive models, one done in a swagger-checked material and effectively trimmed in black, while the other and more elaborate one shows the modish use of fur as trimming.

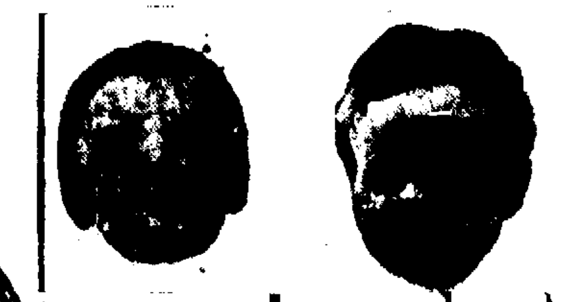

A touch of fur, say the powers that be, will be seen on all of the smartest gowns and wraps this coming season. Even during the past Summer the wearing of silk and chiffon wraps trimmed with fur was one of the incongruities of fashion adopted by the ultra-smart women abroad.

Problems of Everyday Life

MOTHERS' DEPARTMENT

Receiving from time to time numerous inquiries relative to the attitude and duties of mothers toward children has led to the inauguration of this department. Considerable time was given in selecting the proper person to look after this work. We feel sure that "The Doctor's Wife," who is really the wife of a well known physician, who wishes to remain hidden under this nom de plume, is ably fitted for the work. She, a mother herself, has conscientiously made a close study of children and their care.

If all mothers who are puzzled with any perplexities in regard to their children, be these problems great or small—it is often the smaller ones that prove most troublesome—will send a full statement of their cares to the "Doctor's Wife," in care of this paper, they can be assured of a professional hearing and a prompt, sympathetic reply, which will do much to lighten the burden of the puzzled mother.

By the Doctor's Wife.

MOTHER, give me a penny!" "[illegible] please give me a penny!" [illegible] is a familiar cry heard in a majority of small homes, but not [illegible] the cry [illegible] and [illegible] a pleading cry [illegible] which the mother [illegible] listens to it [illegible] wholly [illegible], for such penny given is an encouragement for the cry to be repeated, and what does the little one do with it? He is given the coveted penny [illegible] the [illegible] to the [illegible] in well-worn paths [illegible] and [illegible] that? [illegible] eating the candy, but, if the [illegible] is [illegible], or the [illegible] too. [illegible] a very [illegible] and a spoiled child.

Don't give the child [illegible], but let them not get into the habit of pulling at your skirts and begging for a penny, "just one penny, just one; just [illegible]."

It is natural for children to crave sweets, and in a way it is good for their appetite to be indulged. A certain amount of sugar is necessary to the growing child, but it should not take to [illegible] in the form of cheap candy, and above all, it should not come to him because he [illegible] for it, or because he [illegible] so insistently that the penny or the candy is a "[illegible]" given to gain a few moments of peace at whatever [illegible] to the child. And it is the child who has to pay in the end.

Candy and ice cream [illegible] are responsible for many of the illnesses of little children. The water used at the soda fountains is artificially prepared, and the sirups [illegible]. The glasses and spoons are not always clean, and the [illegible] is usually taken [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] that are [illegible]. If this is not the case, they are injurious in every way to the digestion and the teeth, killing the appetite for wholesome food and creating an unhealthy desire for sweets.

But what shall the children have at picnics, parties and for occasional treats? Oranges, bananas, [illegible], home-made candy, plain [illegible] and "[illegible]," and ice cream, if it is pure and made by a reliable [illegible]. [illegible] cake is perfectly harmless, particularly if it is a little stale. Are not these [illegible] "[illegible]" balls [illegible] always grit up to [illegible], too [illegible] regardless of purity?

Many mothers do not realize the value of fruit to children if it is properly and hygienically given. It is not the fruit itself which is responsible for the [illegible] ills of childhood that are laid at its door, but rather is it that unwashed fruit is a [illegible] carrier of [illegible]. Clean fresh fruit is a suitable addition to the child's diet in summer, and when taken in [illegible] can do no harm.

We should wash all the fruit that [illegible] into our homes, and [illegible] it in [illegible] than a superficial way. Fruit is usually picked by careless and unclean [illegible]. It is handled many times before it reaches us, and it is exposed to filthy insects which [illegible] it. The ground in which fruits grow is often fertilized by putrid matter that is full of [illegible]. In spite of these facts, which it takes very little imagination to magnify to hideous proportions, children are allowed to eat a peach with no attention to the [illegible] skin, or an apple bitten by [illegible] handlings [illegible] that have been picked over a dozen times, grapes, [illegible], all with [illegible] brought in the dirt and disease which is more likely than not to cling to their [illegible]. As I have already said, if fruit is [illegible] well-washed and given to children with bread and butter as part of their regular diet, it is just [illegible] and a splendid substitute for indigestible sweets. Stewed fruit, [illegible] than fresh, because the [illegible] all impurities are done away with. [illegible] in summer, and, if they can be gotten to take it and [illegible] and [illegible] there will be fewer ill children and [illegible] general quality.

And above all, take every precaution to see that what they do have, be it fruit, cake, or candy, is pure. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure in this instance.

Employment Bureau

F. M. B.: Some towns do require the payment of a license for the privilege of conducting an employment bureau, and it is true that [illegible] they charge more for this privilege than for the average business.

However, as you are undertaking the business as an experiment, you could avoid paying the license for the entire year, in advance, by taking it out with the understanding that you are to make your payments quarterly.

A room in your own house or [illegible] might answer the purpose if your house is centrally located, and you can use a room [illegible] from the street. A suitable location is of the utmost importance, although the office equipment need not be expensive. About all you will need for this is a desk and some chairs, books for registering applicants for positions, and applications for help.

Your next step should be to visit department stores and offices with the view of finding vacancies, to be filled. After this, run a daily "ad" in the want columns for the help. Do not undertake the responsibility in accepting applicants for positions.

Your applicants are paying you a fee to obtain for them a position. For this reason, you must make personal visits to stores, factories, hotels, and other firms, that you think may be in need of help and get their requirements. If you are not able to place your applicants within a [illegible] time, it [illegible].

[illegible] will be [illegible] of the disagreeable part of the [illegible] but [illegible]. As a [illegible] hesitate to the applicant [illegible] has registered [illegible].

As a rule it will [illegible] be easy for you to get a list of applicants who are willing to pay the fee [illegible]. As a rule, it is harder to get applicants than to get suitable positions.

The Girl who Works after Business Hours

by Temple Bailey

THE brown-haired stenographer is faced by a problem. She has opened an office of her own and, of course, she wants to get and to hold as much business as possible. For years she had a position with a law firm and in this way became acquainted with out-of-town clients who are now willing to help her by giving her their patronage. Among these clients was a man who, when he came to town, wanted as much of the brown-haired stenographer's time as possible. He kept her working early and late, and paid her well.

For a time everything was lovely, but when he began to ask my little friend to come down after dinner and work far into the hours of the night the question was complex. Indeed, to make the tangle worse, he sometimes insisted that she should not go home to dinner, but should dine with him.

Now, the brown-haired stenographer lives alone in a big city. Her pleasures are few and under ordinary circumstances she would have hailed with delight an invitation to go to one of the big hotels and have the delicious fare that does not grace her everyday table, but she could not welcome the invitation of the out-of-town client, because he is a married man and the brown-haired stenographer has very decided ideas as to the [illegible] of [illegible] social [illegible].

It was not so hard, however, to refuse to eat dinner with him as it was to give up the night work. He paid [illegible] for those extra hours and it was not easy with her small income to forego such an addition to it. "Other girls work at night," she argued; but the trouble lay not so much in the work as in the man for whom she worked.

The brown-haired stenographer's office is on the eighth floor of a high building. At night everything is very quiet, a watchman patrols the halls, and the little lady has no fear. Within her [illegible] office, with its shaded lights and its big leather chair, where the out-of-town client sits when he dictates, there is a home-like air which might almost [illegible] one into believing that it was not an office, but a living room.

The out-of-town client is genial and [illegible], and now and then he breaks [illegible] and talks to the brown-haired stenographer. She is pretty, attractive and womanly. Until a few days ago everything was impersonal between them. Then one night the out-of-town client talked a little longer, a little more intimately, a little more impressively. The next night he came in after dinner, somewhat flushed and [illegible], and he [illegible] in no [illegible] for steady labor. He [illegible], however, on paying the brown-haired stenographer for her time; then, suddenly, before she knew it, she [illegible] by her problem. She must give up her work or be constantly on the defense against a man, who, perhaps with no great depth of evil in him, was inclined to be foolishly sentimental.

"Yet, if I say a word," the brown-haired stenographer wailed, "he will take his work away from me, and I cannot afford to lose it."

"You need say nothing, except that you feel that it is too hard for you to work over hours."

"But I need the money that I make by my night work," she insisted, "and surely I am strong enough to keep things where they should be."

"No woman is strong enough to daily with that which is dangerous," I told her, "although you work, you are still a woman, a young woman and an attractive one. If, in society, chaperons and safeguards are necessary, why should all the bars be let down for you because you have to earn your living?

"An isolated office and an hour near midnight is not a place for a man and a girl to be alone. I know that many employers ask their stenographers to go back to the office and work late, but it is never a wise proceeding, and if you mean to build up a business, you must have a background of dignity and an absolutely unassailable reputation. If you must do night work, have another typewriter, and transcribe your notes at home, but do not be found in big office buildings after dark. It is unsafe, and bad business policy."

I am not sure that the brown-haired stenographer will take my advice. She needs money and needs it badly, and her youthful optimism may make her think that I am old-fogeyish, but I know that, just as surely as she does not take my advice, she will regret it, and, when she is older, she will find that laws have been laid down for men and women, not in an arbitrary way, but because experience has taught us that safety lies in certain conventionalities and prohibitions.

Your Correspondence

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

YOU may be surprised to have me say that letter writing is fast becoming one of the lost arts. Of course, we all write letters, [illegible] about with his heavily laden bag, delivering them from day to day. Still, the writing of letters, as letters used to be written, has gone out of fashion. So often we are in a great hurry when we sit down to write that we simply dash off the news of the day, say that we are well, inquire about the health of the one whom we are addressing, and end abruptly with a promise of sending fuller news [illegible]. The promise is not often kept. [illegible] time of swift journeys on the railways, of quick [illegible], of trips on [illegible] and flying to and fro by way of the trolley, as well as of many [illegible] quite filling our time.

To come to something practical, let me ask you not to put your friends off with a postal card when you ought to [illegible] a letter. The picture postals in [illegible] charming [illegible] of places and [illegible], but they, as well as the ordinary plain postal cards, which are so handy a convenience, have not [illegible] for more than a [illegible] who [illegible] by [illegible] and writing [illegible] to get from two to three hundred words on a postal card. There is [illegible] private and [illegible] on a postal card. This does not mean that you must be afraid that an [illegible] will read what you have written. It rather implies that in a thing so intimate as a letter home or a letter to a dear friend, the writer [illegible] go in an envelope. This protects [illegible], not only, but it [illegible] a little personal gift to the one who receives it.

[illegible] of postal cards have their [illegible] use. Never hesitate to use a card in place of a letter, if you cannot spare the time for writing [illegible]. [illegible] would much rather [illegible] a postal card on Saturday night from their absent daughter than be [illegible] to wait over Sunday without the comfort of a single word from her.

The most natural thing in the world when you are writing to one whom you dearly love is to express affection in exaggerated phrases. I wish I could persuade you to be a trifle [illegible], a little bit formal and never familiar and gushing when you are writing a letter to the dearest one of all. He will understand, read between the lines and love you the more loyally if you do not pour out the whole [illegible] of your heart in the letter [illegible] him [illegible] he is in one place and you in another.

Another good and safe rule about letters is not to write them when you are angry. An angry letter is sure to say more than the writer means. By the time it reaches its destination the temperature has cooled down and the harsh phrases are sure to be regretted. If you ever feel so indignant and resentful that you cannot avoid writing a letter, yield to your desire, but put the letter aside for several days and then read it over.

A word may be in order now as to the materials of a letter. Avoid eccentricities in your stationery. Pure white or [illegible] gray note paper of good quality and medium size with square or oblong envelopes to fit, is your best choice. [illegible] edges, gilded tints and pictorial ornamentation are not in good taste. A letter may be [illegible] perfumed by keeping [illegible] rest in the desk with the stationery. A decided perfume is a little [illegible]. In signing your name, [illegible] your [illegible] and your [illegible] with the [illegible] as Elizabeth [illegible] or [illegible].

I may be pardoned for adding a word or two as to the style of beginning and ending a letter. If you are writing for the first time to a stranger on a matter that constrains yourself, you may properly begin by saying: Mrs. John Smith or Mr. James Brown, following this with Dear Madam or Dear Sir. Ordinarily address your friend as My Dear Mrs. Smith or My Dear Mr. Brown. Dear Mrs. Smith or Dear Mr. Brown has an off-hand air which is [illegible] slovenly. Yours sincerely, Yours truly, or Yours affectionately, is appropriate at the end of a letter. Yours respectfully is a business form not advisable in a social one. Yours devotedly is only for the dearest dear.

The best time to answer a letter is within twenty-four hours after its reception. If you postpone your reply you will write a less interesting letter than if you answer while you are in the first glow of sympathy and [illegible] which filled you when you read the words of your friend.

SEEKING WORK IN A CITY

By May C. Moore.

A SAD little letter comes to this desk asking that something be written which might prevent a few of the large number of untrained girls from going to the cities to seek employment.

From East and West, from North and South at this season of the year, there is an ever-growing tide of rosy-cheeked and bright-eyed girls flowing from the towns to the nearest cities, in search of work.

It is the opening of Fall trade that encourages the girl, of course, to believe that this is the time of the year that affords a special opportunity for the wage earner. The big city is a scene of action. Isn't there a vacancy in that great center of activity for her?

There may be. At least this is the strengthening hope of the girl seeking a position in the city. And thus convinced, the journey cityward is begun.

Sometimes this surmise is correct and the girl from the country is assigned a place with as much alacrity as if she were one of an office force just returned from a Summer vacation. On the other hand, often, yes, I may say too often, it happens that the newcomer finds all places filled or apparently so. There is no room for the beginner. Everybody is too busy to offer any suggestions or receive explanations. You are simply not needed, if you are without experience, that is the end of it. Rather disappointing this, and the newcomer, slender of purse, and humbled in spirit, sits down to analyze the situation and find out, if possible, just why it is so very difficult.

An instance illustrative of this fact occurred not long ago when in a moment of impatience a young girl left home with a small amount of money and an insufficient business training, to find a more congenial environment and a means of support.

Her father kept a store in a small town and she had assisted him with his bookkeeping.

On arriving in the city, she had not thought of applying for a place as a bookkeeper, but after answering many advertisements where invariably a recommendation or a former business experience was required, it occurred to her, now that she was face to face with the necessity of a special training, that she could make good use of the little knowledge she had of bookkeeping.

One morning she answered an ad, and on applying she gave her actual experience as bookkeeper in her father's store. She was a bright-looking, attractive girl and with this a [illegible] that she [illegible] office [illegible] of that kind. [illegible]

[illegible] of the confidence of the inexperienced she took the position, but her triumph was short lived.

The system of bookkeeping that confronted her now was totally different from the one that had answered the needs of her father's store. Her work, too, was in an office where busy men were coming and going, and where conversation played havoc with her concentration.

The hurry and bustle of the place had almost unnerved her and when the manager laid on her desk a couple of days' entries left by her predecessor, her bewilderment was complete.

At noon she took her coat and hat and slipped into the room of the junior partner to inform him that she felt incompetent to hold the position and that she wished to give it up.

The man was so busy he did not even look up during the humiliating recital, but he did take time to snap out testily, "you have no right to take a position as bookkeeper, and waste the time of busy people when you do not understand how to keep a set of books."

Often when I open a girl's letter I find that she is anxious to go to the city because, as she says, a country town or the farm has nothing to offer her in the way of self-improvement, and the city does furnish opportunities for girls of serious purpose, but unless a girl has a previous training, she should have an allowance to live upon until she can get it. The most deplorable feature of this influx of country girls to the city is the fact that so many of them will go with little or no money, with little or no training or experience, when they know it is necessary to become self-supporting from the start. The practical side of the question of [illegible] and experience comes up here and takes a place of paramount importance, because to go without training or business experience is to go without even a fair chance of earning a living wage.

As a rule without the training a girl will have about one chance in fifty of getting a position. With training and business experience she will have about [illegible] chance in twenty of making enough from the beginning.

In view of these facts, how absurd it is for a girl to go without training or without money to pay for training, [illegible] because she is attracted by tales of high wages or a desire to experiment.

True, there are many instances where the country girl has made good, but it is when she has exercised forethought, has ambition and health, money to tide her over the beginning and the definite training for the work that she wishes to undertake. Having learned to do one thing exceptionally well under these circumstances, it is quite possible and very probable that she will not regret the step she has taken.

Life in a city is very different from that of a town. It is difficult from a commercial standpoint and it is lonely from a social point of view, and even when a girl goes with the best possible equipment, she will have much to learn in her new environment and much of hardship before she is able to adapt herself to the new conditions that surround her.

LOWER HALF OF PANEL

Drawn by Sarah Hale Hunter

If the material used is very sheer, the easiest way is to lay it over the design, which will show through plainly, and draw over the line with a hard, sharp lead pencil. If your linen is heavy, lay a piece of impression paper, the kind that does not rub off, lay it on your material, place the design over it and trace with a hard pencil. You will find the design ready to be embroidered.

In transferring a design when only one part is given, fold your material so that the two halves [illegible] together. [illegible] You will find that both sides of the [illegible] on the linen.

GLAZING POTTERY

NO one can [illegible] that pottery without [illegible] of glazing it [illegible] Yet [illegible] as wonderful, beautiful and mysterious as the [illegible] glaze of china will surely lure you into making [illegible] glaze yourself. [illegible] the putting on of the glaze is easy [illegible] and the firing [illegible] is no reason why you should not [illegible] your own glazes.

For raw glazes the following materials are all that will be needed and they may be purchased from any dealer in chemical supplies, pure enough for use. White lead, whiting, barium carbonate, zinc oxide, kaolin, feldspar and flint. These are all bought in the dry state. A glaze is a [illegible] ground of fusible and infusible materials, so balanced that, at the right temperature the [illegible] will melt and flow.

Now for the glaze! You will need the above mentioned chemicals; a metric scale capable of weighing grams (as all the numerals are given in grams), a piece of plate glass and a palette knife, with which to grind the glaze when made.

To make it simply means that you weigh out the proper number of grams of the various chemicals, slightly damp them with water and rub on the glass with a palette knife until the mass is smooth and free from lumps. Here are [illegible] recipes that have been tried and found effective in color and texture.—

LOVELINESS IN DRESS AND BAGS

A Butterfly Gown

Heirlooms and relics which have been packed away for generations being brought forth from their hiding places to deck milady once , and very beautiful are the uses to which many of great-grandmoth- treasures are being put this Autumn. Perhaps the most artistic cre- which has yet appeared is the gown made from a cashmere shawl, h is shown on this page.

In colors it represents the glowing tints of the butterfly, and its richness s it a desirable garment for all sorts of semi-formal afternoon oc- ns.

The newest designs in bags are shown in the remaining pictures on age, they are handsome affairs, ornamented in beading and sequin idery, and smaller in size than those which have pereceded them.
